PRIVATE ROADS. (See also the titles HIGHWAYS, vol. 15, p. 343; PRIVATE WAYS, post.) — See note 1.

PRIVATE STATUTES. — See the title STATUTES.

PRIVATE USE. — See the title EMINENT DOMAIN, vol. 10, p. 1043.

1. Private Roads. — In Sherman v. Buick, 32 Cal. 252, it was held that roads leading from the residences or farms of individuals to the main road which runs through the country, called in the road law private roads, were a particular class of highways or public ways over which any one might pass without committing trespass and were to be distinguished from private ways at common law. The court said: "In accurate legal contemplation, the term private road involves a contradiction. The term is unknown to the common law. It has its origin in American legislation. It cannot be regarded as having been employed as a substitute for the word 'way,' as used at common law. There was no reason or excuse for such a change in legal terminology. It must be taken, therefore, as an invention, and as having been put to use originally merely for the purposes of demonstration — as giving a name to a certain class of roads differing from another and larger class in respect to the steps to be taken in establishing them in the first instance and of keeping them in repair afterward — differences founded upon the just idea that roads, though public, which mainly subserve the convenience of particular individuals should be made a charge upon them instead of the public at large. For the purpose of distinguishing between such roads and those which subserve equally the interests of all, a name for the former was needed, for the legal term 'highway' was alike applicable to both; hence the terms 'public' and private roads. The latter is not to be understood as being synonymous with 'ways' at common law, but as indicating a particular class of highways or public ways over which any one may pass without committing trespass. * * * Roads leading from the main road which runs through the country to the residences or farms of individuals are of public concern and under the control of the government." See also Withers v. Road Com'rs, 3 Brev. (S. Car.) 85, quoting Co. Litt. 56a; Witham v. Osburn, 4 Oregon 324; State v. Mobley, 1 McMull. (S. Car.) 47.

But in People v. Meyer, (County Ct.) 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 119, it was said: "Two classes of ways are known to the law, the public way and the private way. The former the law calls a 'highway,' and the latter a private road. A highway is what the name signifies — a way for public travel, i. e., a public road. The private road is a way for the exclusive use for travel by a particular person or particular persons. It is not for public use in any sense. Over private roads the highway authorities have no control."

Private Roads in the Sense of Private Ways. — In a deed the grantor reserved a road. In construing this reservation the court said: "'Road' is generally applied to highway, street, or lane, often to a pathway, or private way, yet strictly it means only one particular kind of way. Its sense in this deed is very clear. Taking the entire clause, with reference to the grant, it means the reservation of a way. This is as plain as if the word 'way' were in place of 'road,' Lawyer and layman alike would understand the word 'road' in this clause in the same sense as it is used in the statutes providing for grant of private roads. A private road obtained by proceedings under those statutes is a mere way, the owner of the way having no interest in the land. A private way is an incorporeal hereditament of a real nature, entirely different from a common highway; it is 'the right of going over another man's ground.'" Kisler v. Reeser, 98 Pa. St. 4. See also West Pike-land Road, 63 Pa. St. 474. And see the title PRIVATE WAYS, post.

I. DEFINITION, CHARACTERISTICS, AND DISTINCTIONS — 1. Definition. — A private way is a right of passage over or under another person's tenement, which belongs to and is for the use of individuals, one or more, as distinct from a way that is used by the public in general; and such a way is an easement.¹

2. Characteristics. — A private way is generally regarded as an interest in land,² of an incorporeal character;³ that is to say, ownership of the soil over which the way runs is retained by the owner of the land subject to the way, and in the case of a way running through the land of abutting owners the presumption is that the soil is owned by such abutting owners to the middle of the way.⁴

A Way Is a Discontinuous Easement, since the use of it can be enjoyed only through the direct action of the person entitled to the way when entering upon the land subject thereto.⁵

Interest in Land Within Statute of Frauds. — See infra, this title, Acquisition — Express Grant or Reservation — In General.

Way of Necessity Said Not to Be an "Interest in Land." — A statute which provides for the establishment of a right of way by necessity is not unconstitutional as giving the property of one person to another. The statute provides only for the location of a previously existing right of way, and a right of way "is not any interest in land, but merely an easement, which conflicts not in the slightest degree with the absolute proprietorship of the owner." Snyder v. Warford, 11 Mo. 513, 49 Am. Dec. 94.

Right of Passage Must Be over Another's Tenement. — It is essential to the existence of a private way that the right of passage be over the land of another.¹ A way through a person's own land, over which he has absolute dominion, is not a private way within the proper and legal acceptance of that term, but is a mere path.²

Whether a Private Way Is an Incumbrance upon Land so as to constitute a breach of a covenant against incumbrances, is the subject of discussion elsewhere.³

It Is Essential that a Private Way Have Termini, that is to say, a terminus a quo, or the point or place from which the wayowner is to set out in order to use the way, and a terminus ad quem, the place where the way is to end.⁴

Way Must Be of Right. — It is essential that there be a right of passage from the terminus a quo to the terminus ad quem. A revocable permission to set out from one terminus and proceed to the other does not constitute a private way.⁵

3. Distinctions — a. IN GENERAL. — A way may be appurtenant or in gross, and the distinction between the two kinds is very marked and important,⁶ a conversion of the one into the other being impossible.⁷

b. WAYS IN GROSS. — A private way in gross is a mere personal privilege that is generally incapable of assignment and dies with the person who may have acquired it.⁸

c. WAYS APPURTENANT. — The Essentials of a Way Appurtenant are that there must be two distinct tenements, the dominant, to which the right of passage belongs, and the servient, upon which the burden or obligation rests,⁹ and that one terminus of the way must lie on the land to which it is claimed to be appurtenant.¹

Contiguity Not Necessary. — It is not necessary that the dominant and servient tenements should abut upon or adjoin each other.²

Characteristics of Way Appurtenant. — A Way Appurtenant is an Incident of Land and passes with it whether the land be conveyed for years, for life, or in fee,³ no instrument of alienation separate from that passing the land being necessary,⁴ the grantee of any part of the land; no matter how small, being entitled to the way⁵ unless the rights of others are violated thereby or unless the instrument of alienation provides otherwise.⁶

Moreover, in the Event of an Alienation of the Subject Land by sale or otherwise, the alienee, in the absence of an agreement or stipulation to the contrary, and provided he has notice thereof, takes such land encumbered by the way⁷ and is estopped from interfering with the right of passage.¹

A Way Appurtenant Cannot Be Separated or Transferred Independently of the land in which it inheres.²

d. DETERMINATION OF QUESTION WHETHER APPURTENANT OR IN GROSS — In General — Intention of Parties. — The question whether a way is in gross or appurtenant must be determined by the instrument creating it. Where, however, the instrument contains no declaration of the intention of the parties in regard to the nature of the way, the situation of the property and the surrounding circumstances are to be considered.³

The Terminus ad Quem Is of Especial Significance upon the question whether a way is appurtenant or in gross.⁴ Thus, a way used as the only means of access to a public road or highway is always appurtenant whether it be expressly granted, reserved, or implied.⁵

The Duration of the Right of Passage Is Not a Factor that need be considered. Thus, a way of necessity which rests upon implied grant is always appurtenant although limited by the continuance of the necessity to which it owes its existence.⁶

A Way from Land to a Public Common is appurtenant to such land. Rexford v. Marquis, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 249.

6. Duration of Right of Passage. — Dennis v. Wilson, 107 Mass. 591.

The Inheritable Quality of the Right of Passage will not determine the question. Thus, a right of way may be appurtenant to the life interest of a dower estate and expire with it;¹ or the way may be appurtenant to land held for a term of years.²

No Presumption of Way in Gross. — A right of way will never be presumed to be in gross, where it can fairly be construed as appurtenant to land.³

Use of Words of Perpetuity. — The existence of a way in gross is precluded by the use of words of perpetuity, as where the grant or reservation is to a man, his heirs, and assigns.⁴ Moreover, the principle is carried to such an extent that even though the absence of words of inheritance may afford some ground of inference that the way was intended to be in gross, that inference will be overcome where the facts show that a way was intended and is for the benefit of land, has been so used, and is useless for any other purpose.⁵ Where, however, a way has neither terminus on the premises of the person claiming the right of passage,⁶ and is not essential to the enjoyment of his premises,⁷ it will be considered to be in gross.

II. ACQUISITION — 1. In General. — A private way may be acquired by grant express or implied, by reservation or prescription, or under a statute authorizing its establishment.⁸

1. Inheritable Quality of Right. — Hoffman v. Savage, 15 Mass. 130.

2. Appurtenant to Leased Land. — Thorpe v. Brumfit, L. R. 8 Ch. 650. But see Hall v. Armstrong, 53 Conn. 554, in which case a way granted for such time as the grantee should occupy a particular building for a business carried on by him at the time of the grant was held to be in gross.

3. No Presumption of Way in Gross. — Wagner v. Hanna, 38 Cal. 111, 99 Am. Dec. 354; Taylor v. Dyches, 69 Ga. 455; Horner v. Keene, 177 Ill. 390; Kuecken v. Voltz, 110 Ill. 264; *Sanxay v. By Custom. — In England and some states of the Union a private way may be acquired by custom, which might be defined as a sort of prescription by all of a certain community or place. In New York a way by custom does

The Methods of Acquisition by express grant, by implied grant or implication, and by prescription in their origin resolve themselves into one, namely, grant or reservation. They are all derived from the voluntary grant of the proprietor of the fee, which is presupposed in the case of prescription and inferred in the case of a way by implication. The distinction between them therefore relates more to the mode of proving a right of passage than to the source of title thereto.¹

2. Express Grant or Reservation — a. IN GENERAL. — The Formal Requisites of a deed granting a way differ in no respect from those of an instrument conveying any other easement and are the subject of discussion elsewhere.²

Reservation Equivalent to Grant. — A reservation of a way in an instrument by which lands are alienated is equivalent for the purpose of the creation of the right of way to an express grant thereof by the grantee of the lands.³

Decree in Partition. — The decree of a court upon the severance of an estate by partition is equivalent to a grant, and the court may allow a right of way over all the allotments, or it may confine the right of way to one or more of the allotments to the exclusion of the others.⁴

Parol Grants. — Since a private way is generally regarded as an interest in land,⁵ a contract creating the right of passage is within the statute of frauds, and should be in writing,⁶ and at common law must be contained in a deed.⁷

of estoppel or part performance in equity.¹ And where under a parol agreement the way has been used for a sufficient length of time, a prescriptive right of way may be gained, and the agreement may be used to rebut the idea of the use being permissive and to establish a right.²

Recording. — Under statutes requiring that an instrument intended to pass an incorporeal hereditament must, to affect subsequent purchasers or creditors, be recorded in the county where such hereditament lies, a grant creating a private way de novo is not effective unless an entry thereof appears on the public records.³

b. WHO MAY GRANT, AND EXTENT OF GRANT — In General. — It is not requisite that the grantor of a right of way be the owner of the entire fee, but the grantor cannot grant a way greater in extent or duration than the estate which he has.⁴

The Grantor Need Not Restrict the Way to the Surface of the soil; since the rights of ownership extend indefinitely upward and downward, he may grant a way through vaults and cellars under the surface and through halls and passages above the surface, as well as upon the surface.⁵

3. Prescription or Adverse Use. — The essentials of a title by prescription or adverse use to other incorporeal hereditaments are applicable generally to private ways and are the subject of discussion elsewhere.⁶

4. Implication — a. WAYS OTHER THAN WAYS OF NECESSITY. — Authorities differ as to whether, apart from ways of necessity, a way can be created by implication.¹ For the method of creation by implication has been held to be confined to continuous and apparent easements, and by the general current of authority a right of way is not included in these classes.² Yet the tendency of modern cases seems to be to consider ways as capable of being created by implication, and this may be attained either by holding that a way may become a continuous and apparent easement,³ or by declaring that discontinuous easements may fall within the rule,⁴ or by broadening the meaning

4. Discontinuous Easements Created by Implication. — Thus, in Baker v. Rice, 56 Ohio St. 463, the distinction between continuous and discontinuous easements is disproved as somewhat arbitrary and not uniformly adopted. "The better rule," says Minshall, J., "and the one now more generally adopted, is not to consider the particular kind of easement, but whether it is apparent, designed to be permanent, and reasonably necessary to the use of the premises granted." See also Ellis v. Bassett, 128 Ind. 118, 25 Am. St. Rep. 421; McCarty v. Kitchenman, 47 Pa. St. 239, 86 Am. Dec. 538; Phillips v. Phillips, 48 Pa. St. 178, 86 Am. of "ways of necessity."¹ Under this last principle might be fitly placed those cases which recognize a more liberal rule in dealing with an implied grant of way than when the question is of an implied reservation,² or which recognize a way as created by a partition or other simultaneous alienation of two parts of an estate, when it would not exist upon a conveyance of part and a retainer of part.³ Finally, it may be said that some cases seem to treat the whole question, whether in a particular case a way is reserved or passes, as one of the construction of the instrument in the light of surrounding circumstances for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties.⁴

The Question of the Transfer of Ways as appurtenant to an estate is frequently treated as if it involved the same considerations as the creation of ways. Where rights of way are already in existence or appurtenant to an estate, a conveyance of the estate with appurtenances or by a general description merely carries the easement, if such a construction is in accordance with the intention of the parties.⁵

1. "Ways of Necessity" Liberally Construed. — See statement by Boyd, J., in Eliason v. Grove, 85 Md. 227. This principle seems to be illustrated in Alexander v. Tolleston Club, 110 Ill. 65; Durel v. 3. Upon Severance of an Estate by Partition between Heirs, a right of way sometimes arises when it would not exist in case of a conveyance of one portion of the premises, because all the heirs come in with equal rights, and distinctions between implied grants and implied reservations are ignored. 5. Appurtenant Ways Pass under the term "appurtenances." Bruning v. New Orleans Canal, etc., Co., 12 La. Ann. 541. See also the title EASEMENTS, vol. 10, p. 420 et seq., and see APPURTENANT, vol. 2, p. 521 et seq. Or by general description without such words. Moll v. McCauley, 83 Iowa 677; Thompson v. Miner, 30 Iowa 386; Bangs v. Parker, 71 Me. 458; Barnes v. Lloyd, 112 Mass. 232.

Principle — Construction. — The principle is that upon a conveyance of land whatever is in use for it as an incident or appurtenance is presumed to pass with it; but this is a principle of construction, and depends on the intention of the parties as manifested in the deed, and the incidents belonging to the grantor at the time. U. S. v. Appleton, 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 492; Huttemeier v. Albrow, 18 N. Y. 48, affirming 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 546; Mattes v. Frankel, 157 N. Y. 603, 68 Am. St. Rep. 804; Scott v. Moore, 98 Va. 668. See also Pomfret v. Ricroft, 1 Saund. 323, 10 Eng. Rul. Cas. 19; Sheph. Touchstone 69; 4 Kent's Com. 467; and the titles INTERPRETATION, etc., vol. 17, p. 26; LEASES, vol. 18, p. 623; and APPURTENANT, ut supra.

Conveyance "with All Ways Used or Enjoyed," etc. — A conveyance of one of two adjoining tenements belonging to the same person, if "with all ways used or enjoyed," etc., will carry a road over the tenement retained in favor of the tenement granted, where, if the tenements had belonged to different persons, the road would have been an easement in favor of the tenement granted. Bayley v. Great Western R. Co., 26 Ch. D. 434. And see Barkshire v. Grubb, 18 Ch. D. 616; Kay v. Oxley, L. R. 10 Q. B. 360; U. S. v. Appleton, 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 492, where, however, it was said that had the words "ways," etc., been omitted the result would have been the same.

A reference to an existing way in a grant passes the way even though it is not a way of necessity. Smith v. Lock, 18 Mich. 56; Holloway v. Southmayd, 139 N. Y. 390; Newman v. Nellis, 97 N. Y. 285; Parsons v. Johnson, 68 N. Y. 62, 23 Am. Rep. 149; Ranscht v. Wright, 9 N. Y. App. Div. 108.

Georgia. — Taylor v. Dyches, 69 Ga. 455.

On the Severance of a Single Estate, a Way Other than a Way of Necessity cannot, according to many authorities, be created except by employing words sufficient to show an intention to create the way de novo.¹

b. WAYS BY NECESSITY — (1) In General. — Where a tract of land is surrounded wholly by other land belonging to the same person, or partly by such land and partly by land belonging to a stranger, and there is no way of getting to the first mentioned tract except over the adjacent or surrounding land of the owner, a severance of the landlocked tract from the rest of the owner's land by a conveyance of either gives rise to a way of necessity in favor of the landlocked tract over the surrounding land of the owner.² Thus, Maryland. — Hawley v. Baltimore, 33 Md. 270.

Massachusetts. — Loring v. Otis, 7 Gray (Mass.) 563. But see Brainard v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 12 Gray (Mass.) 407, in which case it was said that where the way described as a boundary had never been used as a private way, a conveyance by such description would pass no right of way.

1. Severance of Single Estate — Creation. — Barlow v. Rhodes, 1 Cramp. & M. 438, 3 Tyrw. 280; Morgan v. Meuth, 60 Mich. 238; Fetters

v. Humphreys, 19 N. J. Eq. 471; Mahler v. Brumder, 92 Wis. 477. See also Moll v. McCauley, 83 Iowa 681; Providence Tool Co. v. Corliss Steam Engine Co., 9 R. I. 572, and the title EASEMENTS, vol. 10, p. 425, note.

Use of Appurtenant, etc. — And in such cases it has been frequently held that general words, such as "appurtenances," are not enough to create a right of way. See APPURTENANT, vol. 2, p. 531, note 1, and the following cases: Harding v. Wilson, 2 B. & C. 100, 9 E. C. L. 41; Thomson v. Waterlow, L. R. 6 Eq. 36; Brett v. Clowser, 5 C. P. D. 376; *Roe v. Merger. — So where a way has been extinguished by merger and afterwards a conveyance is made with "appurtenances," or using the words "appertaining" or "belonging," the easement is not revived. Barlow v. Rhodes, 1 Cramp. & M. 438, 3 Tyrw. 280.

Appurtenant and Continuous Easements extinguished by unity of title revive again on severance. See the title EASEMENTS, vol. 10, p. 434.

Statutory Construction of Deed. — In Standiford v. Goudy, 6 W. Va. 364, it was held that the West Virginia statute declaring that a deed should be construed to include appurtenances in the absence of an exception contained therein, did not apply to the creation of ways, but was limited to the transfer of those already existing.

if land purchased be entirely surrounded by lands of the vendor, the law, from the mere fact of the sale and conveyance of land so situated, will imply a grant by the vendor to the purchaser of a right of way over the surrounding land of the vendor to enable the purchaser to have ingress to and egress from his land.¹ So a way by necessity in favor of land retained by the vendor

Where One as a Trustee Conveys Land to another to which there is no access but over the trustee's land, a right of way passes of may be implied over land sold.¹

The Presumption of Law is that it was not the intention of the parties that one should convey land to the other in such a way that the grantee could derive no benefit from the conveyance, nor that the vendor should so convey a portion as to deprive himself of the enjoyment of the remainder.²

Necessity Does Not Create Way. — In strictness, however, the necessity does not create the way, but merely furnishes evidence of the real intention of the parties through whose agency the alienation is effected.³

Effect of Statute Authorizing Establishment of Way. — A right to a way by necessity is not affected by the fact that a private way may be laid out under a statute the terms of which do not expressly change the common law as to ways by necessity.⁴

(2) Method of Alienation. — The method of alienation to raise or transfer a right of way is not material. It may arise by act of parties owning the land,⁵ necessity as incidental to the grant. Howton v. Frearson, 8 T. R. 50.

Land Taken by Eminent Domain. — Where a portion of an estate is taken for public purposes, no way by necessity over the portion taken arises in favor of the part remaining, since the taking is by virtue of a power whose exercise has but one limitation — that compensation should be made for the value of what is taken and for the injury to all that remains.³

Whether a Way by Necessity Arises under a Government Grant is a point upon which there are conflicting authorities. On the one hand it has been held that the doctrine as to a way by necessity does not apply where unsettled lands have been granted by a state, since the establishment and maintenance of public roads penetrating every neighborhood and sufficiently numerous to meet the general wants of the citizens are provided by statute;⁴ while on the other hand it is held that a sale of public land by the United States carries with it, where such land is surrounded by other public land, a way to the land bought, upon the principle that a way by necessity exists after unity of possession of the close to which and the close over which the way exists, and after a subsequent severance.⁵

(3) Essentials of Way by Necessity — (a) In General — Must Be Founded on Presumption of Grant. — The owner of land surrounded by land of another is not entitled to a way by necessity over the surrounding land, where the circumstances are such that no grant or alienation in the nature of a grant can be presumed.⁶

Hecht*, 77 Ill. 570, holding that the fact that the land of a grantee is adjoined by land of the grantor lying between the granted land and the public road does not en-

Waiver of Way. — A purchaser is not entitled to a way by necessity in case he has agreed with his grantor, even verbally, not to claim a way.¹

Necessity of Previous Unity of Possession. — No way by necessity can exist over the land of a stranger; in other words, to be entitled to a way by necessity, land over which it is claimed must at some time have been united in possession with the land in respect of which the way is claimed.²

Where There Is Other Access. — A way by necessity cannot exist if the owner of the land for which it is claimed has access thereto through other property of his own³ or by water over which there is a public right to travel,⁴ notwithstanding it might be more convenient to pass over a highway or across the premises of the grantor.⁵

(b) Necessity — How Created. — The necessity must be created by the severance of a tract of land,⁶ and not by the party claiming the right.⁷

When Necessity Must Arise. — The authorities are not in unison on the question whether a way by necessity can be presumed when the necessity did not exist at the time of the grant. One line of cases holds that the use made of the land for which the way is claimed at the time of the severance of the dominant and the servient estates does not restrict the way-claimant's rights to such use, but that his rights are coextensive with all the lawful uses of which his land is capable. Thus, it has been held that where the land for which the way is claimed was used at the time of the grant for agricultural purposes, title the grantee to a way by necessity over such land.

the way is not limited thereby, but may be claimed for the necessary accommodation of commercial or manufacturing industries on such land.¹ Another line of cases holds that a way by necessity can be presumed to exist only where the necessity existed at the time of the severance of the two estates.²

Degree of Necessity. — A way by necessity must be one whose use is necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property to which it is attached; the fact that the way claimed would be a great convenience is not sufficient.³

The Necessity Required May Vary with the method in which the way is created. See the title EASEMENTS, vol. 10, p. 420 et seq., particularly pp. 423, 424, where the doctrine of particular jurisdictions is examined. See also NECESSARY, etc., vol. 21, pp. 450, 451.

"In Hyde v. Jamaica, 27 Vt. 449, Judge Bennett quotes with approval the statement that 'a way of necessity never exists where a man can get to his own property through his own land, however inconvenient the way through his own land may be.' It is not necessary to inquire whether a way through one's own land must be absolutely impossible. It is clear that mere inconvenience, however great, will not be sufficient. It is necessity, and not convenience, that gives the right." Dee v. King, 73 Vt. 375, per Munson, J.

Land Partly Bordering on Navigable Water. — Where one side of the land for which a way of necessity is claimed borders on navigable water, it may be proved (Kingsley v. Gouldsbrough Land Imp. Co., 86 Me. 279), but in the absence of proof it will be presumed (Hildreth v. Googins, 91 Me. 227), that the approach by water is available and no way of necessity exists over the land. See also Turnbull v. Rivers, 3 McCord L. (S. Car.) 131, 15 Am. Dec. 622; Lawton v. Rivers, 2 McCord L. (S. Car.) 445, 13 Am. Dec. 741.

Reasonable as Distinguished from Absolute Physical Necessity has been held sufficient in the case of the creation of a right of way by implied reservation. Galloway v. Bonesteel, 65 Wis. 79, 56 Am. Rep. 616. And in the case of such creation by implied grant. Pettingill v. Porter, 8 Allen (Mass.) 1, 85 Am. Dec. 671, where the court said: "The word 'necessary' cannot reasonably be held to be limited to absolute physical necessity. If it were so, the way in question would not pass with the land if another way could be made by any amount of labor and expense, or by any possibility. * * * Its effect [that of the word "necessary"] was to require proof that the way over this triangular piece was reasonably necessary to the enjoyment of the dwelling-house granted." See also Smith v. Griffin, 14 Colo. 431; Phillips v. Phillips, 48 Pa. St. 178, 86 Am. Dec. 577; Held v. McBride, 3 Pa. Super. In Bayley v. Great Western R. Co., 26 Ch. D. 452, Bowen, L. J., said: "The rule about rights of way which arise from implication is simply this, that on a severance of two properties anything like a right of way, or any other easement which is used, and which is reasonably necessary for the reasonable and comfortable use of the part granted, is intended to be granted too." Compare Dee v. King, 73 Vt. 375.

Right of Way Necessary for Particular Purpose Only. — McTavish v. Carroll, 7 Md. 352, 61 Am. Dec. 353.

whether the doctrine of eminent domain justifies the establishment of a private way under statute is discussed elsewhere. Where statutes establishing private ways are looked upon as constitutional it is generally upon the ground that there is a strict necessity for the establishment of a way or upon the ground that the public is in some manner interested in their establishment.¹

Statutory Private Ways as Highways. — In some jurisdictions private ways established under statute are in reality public roads.² Such cases are discussed under another title in this work.³

b. CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES. — It has been held that statutes authorizing the laying out of private roads should receive an equitable construction.⁴ This, however, does not mean that the interpretation should in any way be strained.⁵

c. PURPOSE AND PLACE OF ESTABLISHMENT — Purpose. — The affording of access from a particular dwelling or land to a highway or place of necessary public resort, or to a private way leading to a highway, is the general object of statutes authorizing the establishment of private ways.⁶

Place. — A statutory way must have a terminus on the land of the person for whose benefit it is laid out.⁷ Holdings from various states are collected

Ways Opened and in Use for Many Years. — The constitutional prohibition with respect to taking land for private purposes is not applicable where ways have been opened and used for many years. Wheeler v. Gilsey, (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 139.

Eminent Domain Not Involved. — The method of laying out a private way of necessity under a statute has been held not to involve the right of eminent domain, since it merely locates a way, the right to which has always existed. Snyder v. Warford, 11 Mo. 513, 49 Am. Dec. 94.

2. Private Ways Laid Out under Statute Public Roads. — Roberts v. Williams, 15 Ark. 43; Sherman v. Buick, 32 Cal. 241, 91 Am. Dec. 577; Boyden v. Achenbach, 79 N. Car. 539;

7. Statutory Private Ways — Terminus. — Lyon v. Hamor, 73 Me. 56.

Nature of Way Awarded — Louisiana. — The place where a statutory way of necessity is to be exercised must be determined by the court with a view to the due convenience of both in the note.¹

d. WHO MAY ESTABLISH WAY. — The statutes authorizing the establishment of a private way determine who may establish the way. Thus, the power may be exercised by courts, selectmen, or municipal officers, as the case may be.²

e. APPLICATION FOR WAY — (1) Necessity of Application. — The statutes usually provide that a way may be established upon application therefor.³

(2) Sufficiency of Application — (a) Form and Verification — Writing. — Where a statute so requires the application should be in writing.⁴

Verification. — In some cases it is requisite that the petition for a private way should be sworn to.⁵

Compliance with Statutes. — A statute authorizing the establishment of a private way must be substantially complied with, but exact and technical accuracy is not expected.⁶

(b) Essential Averments — Necessity of Way. — Where the statutes authorize the establishment of a private way only in cases of necessity, the petition or application should aver that a way is essential on the ground of necessity.⁷

Description of Way. — The application should describe the way desired with reasonable certainty, a general description from which the way may be located being usually sufficient.⁸

Names of Parties. — The application should specify the names of the owners and occupants of the land over which the way is required⁹ and the person for whose benefit the way is to be.¹⁰

f. NOTICE TO OWNER OR OCCUPANT. — Notice of an application for the establishment of a statutory way must be given to the owner or occupant of the land over which it is proposed to establish the way.¹

Necessity of Written Notice. — In at least one state notice of the proceedings must be in writing.²

Time of Giving Notice. — Any statutory provision relating to the time of giving notice must be complied with.³

Contents of Notice. — The notice should state definitely the time and place at which the meeting of the viewers will be held.⁴

Personal Notice. — Where the statutes or rules so require, personal notice must be given.⁵

Record Must Show Notice. — The record must show that the provisions of the statute with respect to notice have been complied with.⁶

g. COMMISSIONERS OR VIEWERS — (1) In General. — Where the way is to be established by a court, the statutes usually provide that all questions respecting the necessity of the way and the compensation to be paid to the owner of the land taken for the purposes of the way shall be determined by commissioners, viewers, or jurors.⁷

(2) Selection and Appointment of Viewers. — The persons selected or appointed as viewers must be those contemplated by the statute.⁸ The viewers must be disinterested,⁹ but the fact that a viewer has served in previous ineffectual proceedings taken by the same person to obtain another way to reach the same lands is no ground of objection.¹

(3) Order for View. — An order appointing viewers should state facts that will warrant the establishment of a way. Thus, in cases where a way can be opened only for particular purposes, an order for view is defective if it does not state one of those purposes.²

(4) Report, Inquest, or Return — Compliance with Statute. — The report, inquest, or return should show a substantial compliance with the writ of summons.³

Sufficiency of Report. — The return of the viewers should show that the way is necessary;⁴ should describe it with reasonable certainty,⁵ and should show the amount of damages that will be sustained by the owner of the land through which the way is to be made,⁶ and who shall pay them.⁷

Objections May Be Made to a Report of Viewers in the form of exceptions, remonstrance, or appeal, as the statutes provide.⁸

h. ORDER ESTABLISHING WAY — Description of Way. — Those to whom the duty of laying out the way is intrusted must establish the way described in the application, they having no discretion either to refuse to lay out the way, to change its location, or to depart in any respect from the way proposed by the applicants.⁹ Accordingly, the order must give a description of the way that corresponds generally with the description given in the report of the viewers, commissioners, or jury, as the case may be.¹⁰

Gates and Fences. — In Kentucky a court, in establishing a way, may, if necessary, require the erection of gates and fences.¹¹

Recording Order. — The statutes sometimes provide for the recording of an order establishing a private way.¹²

i. APPEAL AND CERTIORARI — Appeal. — A person not appearing to be affected by the establishment of a private passway, and not a party to the proceeding, cannot sue out a writ of error.¹³

Certiorari. — Where an order for the establishment of the way has been made, certiorari will lie to review the proceedings, in accordance with the principles pertaining to certiorari generally.¹⁴

j. OPENING WAY. — Actual opening of a private way is provided for or is essential under the statutes in several states.¹

Who Must Open Way. — The duty of opening a statutory private way devolves upon the person who made application therefor.²

k. DAMAGES. — The party for whose benefit a private way is established must pay to the owner of the land over which such way passes all damages resulting to the land from the establishment of the way.³

III. ESTABLISHMENT OF WAY — In General. — A private way may be established in an action brought by the wayowner on the ground of an interruption or obstruction of the right of passage to which he is entitled, or by means of a plea of justification in an action of trespass.⁴

Burden of Proof. — The burden of proving a way is necessarily upon the person who seeks to establish it.⁵ Thus, where the way claimed is by grant, the party claiming it must produce the grant⁶ unless secondary proof is admissible according to the ordinary rules of evidence in the event of the loss or destruction of the grant.⁷

Expenses of Location Not to Be Borne by State. — No portion of the expense of locating a private way is chargeable to the state or county, but the expenses must be paid by the person for whose benefit the way is located. Doniphan County v. Albright, 8 Kan. App. 238.

4. Actions for Obstruction. — See infra, this title, Rights, Duties, and Liabilities of Parties — Obstruction of Way.

5. Burden of Proof of Way. — Oswald v. Wolf, 129 Ill. 200; Bigelow Carpet Co. v. Clinton, 108 Mass. 70 Smith v. Porter, 10 Gray (Mass.) 66. See also Powers v. Foucher, 12 Mart. (La.) 35, holding that in an action brought to enforce a right of way, a defense of forfeiture by nonuser need not be proved by the defendant, but the plaintiff must establish user; otherwise proof of a negative would be required.

6. Claimant by Grant Must Produce Grant. — Lanier v. Booth, 50 Miss. 410; Osborne v. Butcher, 26 N. J. L. 308; Lawton v. Rivers, 2 McCord L. (S. Car.) 445, 13 Am. Dec. 741.

Age of Grant Immaterial. — A grant of yesterday is of equal validity with one of a century past. Lawton v. Rivers, 2 McCord L. (S. Car.) 445, 13 Am. Dec. 741.

Where Substituted Way Is Claimed. — Where the way is alleged to have been acquired by substitution for another way previously reserved or granted, the claimant must show an agreement of substitution or a continuous user of the way for a sufficient time to warrant the presumption of the grant.¹

The Proof Necessary to Establish an Easement by Prescription is the subject of consideration elsewhere. As a general rule it is essential to prove use and occupation or enjoyment of the way, the use of the same way without change or variation, and the existence of a right thereto adverse to the right of some other person.²

IV. RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES — 1. In General — a. WAY BY GRANT OR RESERVATION. — Where the way was acquired by grant or reservation, the extent of the easement must be determined by the true construction of the grant or reservation by which it was created, aided by any circumstances surrounding the estate and the parties which have a legitimate tendency to show the intention of the parties.³

User of Way under Grant Not Material. — The grant is conclusive of the right even if the way was never enjoyed. Lawton v. Rivers, 2 McCord L. (S. Car.) 445, 13 Am. Dec. 741.

Proof of Agreement for Right of Way Sufficient. — Shannon v. Timm, 22 Colo. 167; Valentine v. Schreiber, 3 N. Y. App. Div. 235; Allen v. Vandervort, (Pa. 1887) 11 Atl. Rep. 316.

Rights of Owner by Reservation. — The owner of a way by reservation has no greater rights under it than he would have if the way were acquired by grant.¹

b. WAY BY PRESCRIPTION OR ADVERSE USE. — When a way has been acquired by prescription, the wayowner's rights are determined in general by the prior use of the way, and are commensurate therewith.²

2. Owner of Way — a. EXTENT OF EASEMENT — (1) In General. — The wayowner is not by reason of his ownership entitled to the possession or the right to possession of the tenement subject to the way,³ but is merely entitled to the reasonable use and enjoyment of the servient soil for the purpose of passage over its surface⁴ and to all rights that are properly incident to the free enjoyment and exercise of the right of passage.⁵ He is not ordinarily entitled to a passage beneath the surface nor above it at any elevation that he may elect.⁶

User by Servants of Wayowner. — A right of way does not necessarily extend to the servants of the wayowner; the way may be either by grant or prescription a way personal to the owner of land and his tenants, servants being expressly excluded.⁷

Members of Wayowner's Family. — The members of the family of a wayowner residing with such owner have, in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, a right of using a way appurtenant to land.⁸

Third Parties. — Where the Way Is Appurtenant the wayowner may license others to use it for the purposes of coming to and going from the dominant tenement, provided he does not thereby increase the burden upon the servient tenement.⁹

User of Statutory Way. — The statutes expressly or impliedly confine the use of the way when established to the owner or occupier of the land for the benefit of which the way is to be established and to those claiming under him.¹

Walker*, 99 Wis. 404.

Where a right of way has been exercised for all purposes connected with the use of a farm for residential or agricultural purposes, the occupiers of the farm are not entitled to a right of way to cart materials for building. Wimbledon, etc., Conservators v. Dixon, 1 Ch. D. 362; London v. Riggs, 13 Ch. D. 798. Compare Ames v. Shaw, 82 Me. 379.

Common Owners of Way. — Where more than one person is entitled to a way, it is the duty of all the parties interested so to arrange the use thereof as best to facilitate its use by others interested therein.²

(2) Limitations upon Use — (a) Where Use Is Defined. — The wayowner may use the way only for the purposes of the land to which the way is appurtenant and in the manner specified in the grant or reservation, or according to customary use, where the way was acquired by prescription. Should he go beyond such use he becomes a trespasser and is liable accordingly.³

Enlargement of Right by Implication. — Where the wayowner's rights are expressly defined he cannot extend them by implication.⁴

Where Character of Dominant Tenement Is Changed. — Where the condition and character of the tenement to which a way is appurtenant are substantially altered, the right of way cannot be used for new purposes required by the altered condition of the property, if a greater burden is thereby imposed on the servient estate. Wimbledon, etc., Conservators v. Dixon, 1 Ch. D. 362; Atwater v. Bodfish, 11 Gray (Mass.) 150; Parks v. Bishop, 120 Mass. 340, 21 Am. Rep. 519.

Where There Is Not a Right of Passage at all times, but only a right at intervals and for certain purposes, the wayowner is entitled to use the way only at such times and for such purposes. Illustrations. — A grant of a way for the ordinary purposes of a house does not entitle the grantee to pass with his horses through it or use it as a common footway to the stable.

Liberal Construction of Right. — While, however, the terms cannot be enlarged beyond their natural meaning, they will not be so narrowed as to prevent the beneficial use by the grantee of what is granted in the manner and for the purposes fairly indicated by the grant.¹

(b) Where Use Is Not Defined. — Where the wayowner's rights are not defined, the way must be considered as adapted to the convenient use and enjoyment of the land to which it is appurtenant, for any useful and proper purpose for which such land may be used.²

In Determining the Purposes for Which a Way May Be Used it is proper to take into consideration the condition of the way as it was when the right of passage was first acquired,³ the customary use made of the way,⁴ and the nature and relative location of the respective tenements to each other.⁵

(c) Width of Way. — Where the Way Is Described as of a Definite Width, without any restriction, the wayowner may use the entire specified width, and is not confined to a path of a necessary or even convenient width.¹

Where the Width Is Not Expressly Defined it must be ascertained by presumption and implication in accordance with the general rule as to the construction of grants which do not define the circumstances of the way in general,² the wayowner in such case being entitled to a way of a convenient width for the purposes for which the easement was intended.³

Statutory Ways. — The width of a statutory private way may be provided for by the statute authorizing its establishment.⁴

b. GATES AND FENCES — Duty of Wayowner to Replace Gates. — Where a gate or bar is lawfully erected, the wayowner is liable in trespass for unlawfully removing it, the great preponderance of convenience to the owner of the servient tenement over the slight inconvenience to the wayowner seeming to make such rule reasonable.⁵

The Wayowner May Not Fence in the way and thereby exclude the owner of the servient tenement from such uses as he may make of his land not inconsistent with the easement.⁶

c. DUTY TO OPEN WAY. — The owner of the servient estate is not compelled to open the way; such duty devolves upon the wayowner.⁷

Manner of Opening and Preparing Way. — For this purpose the wayowner may do

New York. — Gillespie v. Weinberg, 148 N. Y. 238; Brill v. Brill, 108 N. Y. 511; Bakeman v. Talbot, 31 N. Y. 371, 88 Am. Dec. 275.

Tennessee. — Brown v. Berry, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 98.

1. Right to Use Whole of Specified Width. — Brownell v. Dyer, 5 Mason (U. S.) 227; Rotch v. Livingston, 91 Me. 461; State v. Clements, 32 Me. 279; Frank v. Benesch, 74 Md. 58, 28 Am. St. Rep. 237; Gerrish v. Shattuck, 128 Mass. 571; Nash v. New England Mut. L. Ins. Co., 127 Mass. 91; Tucker v. Howard, 122 Mass. 529; Welch v. Wilcox, 101 Mass. 162, 100 Am. Dec. 113; Salisbury v. Andrews, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 250; Smith v. Union Switch, etc., Co., 31 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. (Pa.) 21; Brown v. Berry, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 98; Morton v. Thompson, 69 Vt. 432; Germain dit Belisle v. Pigeon, 16 Quebec Super. Ct. 235.

Effect of Practical Location as to Width. — Where at the time of the grant a way of a particular width is practically located, and has been so used for some time, the effect is as if the width had been fixed by the deed. George v. Cox, 114 Mass. 382.

The Existence of Buildings or Permanent Structures inclosing the way will control a description of the width by feet. Stevenson v. Stewart, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 293. See generally the title BOUNDARIES, vol. 4, p. 765.

2. Ascertainment of Width Where Not Defined. — Stevenson v. Stewart, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 293; Brown v. Berry, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 98.

3. Wayowner Entitled to Convenient Width. — Hutton v. Hamboro, 2 F. & F. 218; Frank v. Benesch, 74 Md. 58, 28 Am. St. Rep. 237; Salisbury v. Andrews, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 250; Atkins v. Bordman, 2 Met. (Mass.) 457, 37 Am. Dec. 100; Grafton v. Moir, 130 N. Y. 465, 27 Am. St. Rep. 533; York v. Briggs, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 124; Farrington v. Bundy, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 617; Stevenson v. Stewart, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 293.

How Width May Be Proved. — The deed of a common grantor is admissible in evidence to show what is the width of a passageway between adjoining estates. Brown v. Stone, 10 Gray (Mass.) 61, 69 Am. Dec. 303.

What Is Suitable Width Question of Fact. — George v. Cox, 114 Mass. 382; York v. Briggs, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 124.

Private Stairway Must Be of Reasonable Width. — Farrington v. Bundy, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 617.

4. Width of Way Provided for by Statute. — Aaron v. Gunnels, 68 Ga. 528. And see the statutes of the different jurisdictions, e. g., Civ. Code Ala. (1896), § 2496; Comp. Laws Mich. (1897), § 4147.

5. Duty to Replace Gates or Fences Lawfully Erected. — Green v. Goff, 153 Ill. 534; Boyd v. Bloom, 152 Ind. 152; Phillips v. Dressler, 122 Ind. 414, 17 Am. St. Rep. 375; Houpes v. Alderson, 12 Iowa 161; Ames v. Shaw, 82 Me. 379; Bean v. Coleman, 44 N. H. 539; Whaley v. Jarrett, 69 Wis. 613, 2 Am. St. Rep. 764. See also infra, this section, Owner of Land Subject to Way — Gates, Bars, and Fences.

6. Wayowner May Not Fence to Landowner's Detriment. — Sizer v. Quinlan, 82 Wis. 390, 33 Am. St. Rep. 55. See also Dyer v. Walker, 99 Wis. 404; Wille v. Bartz, 88 Wis. 424. But see Harvey v. Crane, 85 Mich. 316, in which case the way was a statutory one, and it was held that the wayowner might employ reasonable methods to protect himself from the danger attending the driving of stock along the way when the fields of the owner of the servient tenement were not inclosed, on the ground that to withhold such a right and at the same time hold him responsible for any damage that his stock might do to the property of the owner of the servient tenement would destroy the value of the way.

7. Duty to Open Way. — McCusker v. Spier, 72 Conn. 628; Hennessey v. Old Colony, etc., R. Co., 101 Mass. 540. See also Loring v. Otis, 7 Gray (Mass.) 563.

upon the servient land any work which is necessary, fit, and proper to enable him to use and enjoy his right in a manner beneficial and advantageous to himself, provided he does not thereby make any material change in the state and condition of the soil or disturb or interfere with the estate or privileges of other persons therein.¹

Stones or Gravel in the soil of the way may be used for the purpose of constructing the way, but must not be removed therefrom by the wayowner.²

d. REPAIRS — In General. — The owner of a tenement subject to a right of passage is not bound to keep the way in repair or to be at any expense to maintain it in a passable condition³ unless he has agreed so to do.⁴

The Right of Repair Is Incident to the Easement. — Accordingly, whether the way was acquired by grant or otherwise, the wayowner has the right to make such repairs to the way as are necessary for its reasonable use,⁵ provided that thereby no material change in the state and condition of the soil is effected,⁶ and that the estates or privileges of other persons therein are not disturbed.⁷

Duty of Wayowner to Repair. — Some authorities hold that it is the duty of the wayowner to repair,⁸ and for a breach of this duty he is liable to the landowner.⁹

Statutory Ways. — In some cases it is provided that a statutory private way must be kept in repair by the person on whose application it is established.¹⁰

1. Manner of Opening and Preparing Way. — Brown v. Stone, 10 Gray (Mass.) 61, 69 Am. Dec. 303. See also Lyman v. Arnold, 5 Mason (U. S.) 195.

Wayowner Need Not Repair for Others' Benefit. — Repairs to a statutory private way need not be made for the benefit of persons who have acquired a prescriptive right to it. Puryear v. Clements, 53 Ga. 232.

Private Road over Bridge. — Where the private

3. Owner of Land Subject to Way — a. IN GENERAL. — All the rights, benefits, and privileges of ownership consistent with and subject to the reasonable and proper enjoyment of the way belong to the owner of the servient tenement,¹ and the wayowner cannot make valid objection to his exercise of such rights.²

A Joint Use of the land subject to the way by both parties in the sense that a use by the wayowner should at any time give way to a use by the landowner is contrary to the idea of a way and is not recognized.³

Right of Passage. — In the case of an ordinary way, the owner of the land subject thereto has a right to pass to and fro over it in common with the wayowner unless such a common use of the way impairs or infringes upon the rights of the wayowner.⁴ The landowner, however, may have expressly contracted away such right of passage to the wayowner,⁵ or may have vested the right of passage in others by alienating the land subject to the way.⁶

Duty to Persons Rightfully Using Way. — The owner of the soil over which a way runs is liable for any accident to the persons entitled to use the way occurring through the negligence of the owner of the land or of his agents.⁷

b. LOCATION OF PRIVATE WAYS — (1) Ways by Necessity — Right to Locate. — The person whose tenement is subject to a way by necessity has the right to designate a course therefor. If he does not exercise this right the way may be located by the owner of the land to which the way is appurtenant,⁸ and his selection will be supported unless he is chargeable with palpable abuse of the right to locate.¹

Manner of Location. — The owner of the tenement to which a way by necessity is appurtenant cannot claim a way over all parts of the servient tenement² unless the way is still undefined;³ he is generally entitled only to a single⁴ convenient way.⁵

The Route Is to Be Determined Not by the Sole Interest of Either the Wayowner or the Landowner, but by the reasonable convenience of both.⁶

(2) Expressly Granted or Reserved Ways — Who May Locate. — Where a way is expressly granted, but its precise location is not fixed by the instrument of conveyance, it is competent for the parties to define the location by subsequent agreement or by acts, conduct, declarations, and acquiescence, indicating a practical location, accompanied by user from the date of the creation of such right of way.⁷

Indefinite Location. — The reservation of a right to pass and repass on foot over granted premises to repair a building when necessary is not a definite location. Phipps v. Johnson, 99 Mass. 26.

Convenience of Both Parties Must Be Consulted. — Stephens v. Gordon, 22 Can. Sup. Ct. 61; Pratt v. Sanger, 4 Gray (Mass.) 84.

Failure to Locate and use a way to which a person is entitled by grant does not cause any loss of the way as originally granted. Quigley v. Baker, 169 Mass. 303.

Evidence of Location — Admissibility — Subsequent Agreement to Locate Admissible. — Kinney v. Hooker, 65 Vt. 333, 36 Am. St. Rep. 864.

Where Way Open and in Use. — Where, at the time when a deed is given and accepted, a way is open, visible, and in use, to the knowledge of both parties to the deed, and such use is continued afterwards, there is a strong presumption that such way was the one that the parties had in mind,¹ although such presumption is not necessarily conclusive.²

Acquiescence in Use of Route. — The acquiescence of the owner of the servient tenement in the continued use of a particular route by the wayowner has the same effect as a full description of the way in the instrument of conveyance.³

Where There Are Two Roads, either of which will answer the description contained in a deed, that road must be adopted which a reasonable construction of the instrument requires, having due regard to the rights and interests of each party. Thus, where one way is almost impracticable, the other must necessarily be considered as the one contemplated.⁴

(3) Change of Location. — The owner of a way and the owner of the land over which it runs may alter the location of a definitely located and established way,⁵ but the course of such a way cannot be altered by either the landowner or the wayowner, without the consent of the other.⁶ The fact that the owner of the servient tenement provides a new road will not authorize him to close an established way without consent of the wayowner.¹

An Agreement to Change the Location of a Way Need Not Be in Writing, but may be inferred from the words or conduct of the parties.²

Rights in New Way. — The substitution of a new way by consent of both owners entitles the owner of the land to which the way is appurtenant to such rights in the new way as he had in the old, but to no more.³

(4) Right to Go Extra Viam. — The general rule that a traveler on a public way may pass over the adjoining land so far as may be necessary to avoid an impassable place, taking care to do no unnecessary damage,⁴ is not applicable to a private way that has become impassable. Thus, the person entitled to the way is not entitled by reason of the impassability thereof to deviate therefrom on to adjoining land of the owner of the servient tenement,⁵ unless such impassability is created by the owner of the land subject to the way,⁶ or unless the way is one by necessity.⁷ Some authorities, however, hold that there is no distinction in this respect between a way by necessity and a way acquired by prescription or by express grant or reservation, because a way by necessity is in reality nothing but a way by grant or reservation,⁸ the reasonable repair of which, as a general rule, is a duty devolving upon the party enjoying the benefit of the way.⁹

c. GATES, BARS, AND FENCES — (1) Gates and Bars — In General. — The right of a person whose land is subject to a way to maintain gates across the way is dependent on the circumstances, for where a way is created by grant or reservation it is competent for the parties at that time to regulate the facilities for passage as well as the right of passage.¹

Where There Is a General Grant of a Private Way, express or implied, or by necessity, the rule is that the owner of the soil may maintain a gate or bar at the places where the way intersects the public road,² unless the nature of the use to which the way is to be applied indicates that the way is to be open and unobstructed.³ But the gate or bar must be of such a character that it does not unreasonably obstruct the use of the way.⁴

A Deed in General Terms not providing that the owner of the land over which the way passes may erect gates or bars does not necessarily imply either a right or a denial of the right.⁵

Where Existing Way Is Not Open. — Where there is a grant of an existing way which at the time is subject to gates or bars, and such gates or bars are suffered by the grantee to remain, the way may, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, be considered as having been taken subject to such incumbrances.⁶

out, and it is unobstructed by gates or bars when granted, neither the owner of the servient tenement nor the wayowner has afterwards a right to erect either gates or bars.¹

(2) Fences. — The owner of the soil may, in general, fence the way or leave it unfenced at his pleasure.²

d. BUILDINGS AND ERECTIONS — Right to Construct. — In the absence of any restriction by grant or otherwise, the owner of land subject to a way may construct a building or erection over it provided such building or erection does not prevent the wayowner from enjoying, in a reasonable manner, his right of passage for those purposes presumably in contemplation at the creation of the way.³

Where Building Is Obstruction. — Where, however, the terms of an instrument creating a way and the surrounding circumstances show that the purpose was that the way should be kept open and unobstructed, not only for passage, but for light, air, and prospect, any building or encroachment on the way that interferes with such light, air, and prospect constitutes an illegal obstruction.⁴

e. CULTIVATION OF LAND. — Whether the owner of the soil over which a way runs may cultivate such land depends upon the question whether the cultivation interferes with the right of way.⁵

4. Wrongful Use of Way. — The owner of land subject to a way has a right to protect his estate as owner of the soil. Accordingly, he may prevent by injunction a use of the way for purposes not authorized,⁶ or, in the event of an improper use of his land, may maintain an action to recover the possession of the land⁷ or to recover damages in trespass or case.⁸

The Suitableness for the Defendant's Purposes of a building situated on the land subject to the way has been held not to enter into the rightfulness of the obstruction caused thereby; the question is the defendant's right to erect it. Blanchard v. Moulton, 63 Me. 434.

Upon the Question Whether the Defendant's Obstruction Was Rightful, evidence of obstructions by other persons at other places is inadmissible. Randall v. Chase, 133 Mass. 210. See also Golden v. Coonan, 107 Iowa 209, holding it immaterial that the defendant had no right of way over third persons' lands to reach his own.

The Fact that a Gate Across the Way Has Been Left Open, whereby the defendant's cattle have strayed and trespassed, does not justify him in obstructing the way, in the absence of evidence that the gate was left open by the plaintiff. Golden v. Coonan, 107 Iowa 209.

out legal proceedings, be removed by the wayowner, provided that in so doing no breach of the peace be committed,¹ and the land may be adapted to its reasonable use as a way so as to do no unnecessary injury to adjoining property.²

(2) Summary Removal. — In Georgia the county commissioners and ordinaries may summarily remove obstructions from private ways acquired by seven years' prescriptive right or a longer possession or user. Such a way, however, must not exceed fifteen feet in width, and must have been kept open and in repair by the person requesting the removal.³

(3) Action for Damages. — An action at law in the nature of trespass on the case is the proper and ordinary remedy available to recover for damages caused by an interruption, disturbance, or obstruction of a private way,⁴ in

Right Extinguished or Waived. — Where it appears that a right of passage which previously existed has been extinguished, or that the right has been waived, no injunction is warranted.¹

Establishment of Complainant's Right at Law. — To warrant the granting of an injunction to prevent an interference with or obstruction to a private way, the right of passage must, in accordance with general principles, either have been established at law or the facts upon which it depends must be clear and undisputed.²

Mandatory Injunction. — The right to an injunction is not generally affected by the fact that the obstruction is actually in existence at the time when relief is sought, and a mandatory injunction compelling the removal of the obstruction will be issued in cases where it is the obvious intention of the landowner permanently to prevent the use of the way.³

An Injunction Is Not Available where a full and complete remedy for an obstruction by an action at law is provided by statute.⁴

(6) Criminal Prosecution.—The obstruction of a private way is not a wrong of a public nature that can at common law be punished as a criminal offense.²

c. WHO MAY SUE.—The Owner of the tenement to which the way attaches is entitled to maintain an action for an obstruction or disturbance of the way.³

Lessees have a right to sue for an obstruction of a way attached to a tenement used and occupied by them as tenants.⁴

Lessors.—The fact that the land to which the way attaches is in the occupation of a tenant is not an objection to the lessor's right to sue for an obstruction to the way.⁵

One of Several Entitled to Use a Way has a right to take proceedings for an obstruction of the way, independently of the others.⁶

d. WHO MAY BE SUED.—Any person who creates or assists in creating and maintaining an obstruction is liable to be sued therefor.⁷

e. ACCRUAL OF RIGHT OF ACTION.—Whenever the use of a way is obstructed or interrupted, a right of action accrues although no actual damage results from such interruption, and it is not necessary for the wayowner to demand the removal of the obstruction before suit.⁸

f. ESSENTIALS TO RECOVERY.—In order to recover damages for the obstruction of a private way the plaintiff must prove not only the obstruction, but his right to use the way without obstruction, and to prove this right he must establish a way acquired by one of the methods heretofore referred to.⁹

g. DAMAGES. — The general rules relating to the recovery of damages for torts to real property are applicable to actions for the obstruction or disturbance of a private way.¹ Thus, proof that the wayowner has suffered actual or special damage is not necessary,² but nominal damages are always recoverable.³ There may, however, be under certain circumstances a recovery of punitive or exemplary damages.⁴ As a general rule, there can be a recovery only of such damages as were suffered up to the institution of the action.⁵

Entire Damages Recoverable. — A person causing an entire obstruction of a way is responsible for the whole damage caused thereby, notwithstanding there are partial obstructions created by others.⁶

Matter in Mitigation of Damages may be shown. Thus, the defendant may show that the way obstructed is not a strict necessity.⁷

V. EXTINGUISHMENT OF WAY — 1. In General — a. BY RELEASE OR ABANDONMENT — (1) In General. — A way owned by more than one person cannot be released or abandoned by one of such owners to the detriment of the other or others,⁸ although one owner may abandon his own right.⁹

(2) Release. — A way may be extinguished by a release under seal,¹⁰ but as it is an interest in land within the statute of frauds a deed is essential.¹¹

But an Executed Parol Agreement may amount to an abandonment and extinguish the way.¹²

A parol agreement to extinguish a way is, when partially performed, valid and operative as an equitable estoppel to extinguish the

(3) Abandonment by Acts in Pais. — A party entitled to a private way may abandon and extinguish his right by acts in pais, without deed or other writing.¹

Acts Relied On to Show Abandonment Must Be Unequivocal Acts of the owner of the dominant tenement indicating a clear intention to abandon.² Mere nonuser of a private way is not sufficient proof of an abandonment.³ Thus, the fact that a route just as convenient as an old route has been regularly used as a substitute by the wayowner is not, standing by itself, proof of abandonment.⁴

Nonuser Accompanied by Acts Showing Intention to Abandon. — Nonuser, however, accompanied by acts on the part of the owner of either the dominant or the servient tenement which manifest an intention to abandon, and which destroy the object for which the way was created or the means of its enjoyment, will effect an abandonment.⁵

Adverse User as Proof of Abandonment. — Currier v. Howes, 103 Cal. 431; Bannon v. Angier, User of the Way for Purposes Not Contemplated has been considered to be sufficient proof of abandonment.¹

Obstructions. — The existence of permanent obstructions erected by the wayowner² or acquiesced in by him³ is strong evidence of an intention to abandon, although the placing of a temporary obstruction by the wayowner or an acquiescence therein by him is not so considered.⁴

b. BY UNITY OF SEIZIN OR MERGER. — Where the ownership of the land subject to a private way and of the land to which such way is appurtenant become united in the same person, an extinguishment of the way is effected, because the essential ingredient of a way, viz., a right of passage over another's land, disappears.⁵

c. DEDICATION. — A private way being a property right in the wayowner of which he cannot be deprived, regardless of the question whether he would be injured by the taking, the owner of the servient tenement cannot by dedication of the way deprive the wayowner of his rights, for when the public authorities have taken possession and control of the way it might be put to uses which would injure him, or it might be repaired and improved in a manner which would result in his injury. The way, of course, may be made public by dedication, but in that case the wayowner must have released his rights or must have been deprived of them by process of law.⁶

d. EMINENT DOMAIN. — The exercise of the right of eminent domain extinguishes a right of way to which the land taken is subject.⁷

e. BY CESSATION OF ESTATE OR USE. — A way created in or appurtenant to a particular estate or for a special purpose ceases when the estate is determined or when the purpose is no longer possible.¹

f. BY INCREASE OF BURDEN. — A way cannot be destroyed by increase of burden; for that doctrine is restricted to commons.²

2. Ways by Necessity. — A way by necessity, in whatever manner it may have originated, is not extinguishable while its use is requisite,³ but ceases with the necessity which created it,⁴ and is suspended by a temporary cessation of the necessity.⁵

3. Statutory Private Ways. — A statutory private way may either be expressly discontinued or regarded as discontinued because not opened or because, when it is finally located, the land is not entered upon and taken into possession for the purpose of a way within such time as the statutes require.⁶

Reasons for Change or Vacation. — The uselessness, inconvenience, or burdensome character of a statutory private road is a necessary basis for a proceeding to change or vacate it.⁷

Express Discontinuance — Who May Discontinue. — An express discontinuance of a private way may be effected by persons appointed for that purpose or by the court.⁸

PRIVILEGE. (See also the titles EXEMPTIONS (FROM TAXATION), vol. 12, p. 266; LIBEL AND SLANDER, vol. 18, p. 851; LICENSE (REAL PROPERTY), vol. 18, p. 1127; OCCUPATION, BUSINESS, AND PRIVILEGE TAXES, vol. 21, p. 770; PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS, post; TAXATION. And see FRANCHISES, vol. 14, p. 4.) — A privilege is an exemption from such burdens as others are subjected to;² a right peculiar to the person on whom it is conferred, not to be exercised by another or others.³ "The word 'privilege' may be defined as a right peculiar to an individual or body."⁴

Tennessee Tax Statute. — Where, by the Constitution of Tennessee, the legislature was entitled to tax privileges, a privilege was defined to be whatever the legislature might choose to declare to be a privilege. Kurth v. State, 86 Tenn. 136; Columbia v. Guest, 3 Head (Tenn.) 414; Jenkins v. Ewin, 8 Heisk. (Tenn.) 456; Nashville, etc., Turnpike Co. v. White, 92 Tenn. 370.

Privilege and Right Distinguished. — In St. Louis Gas-Light Co. v. St. Louis Gas, etc., Co., 16 Mo. App. 65, it was said: "The word privilege, though nearly allied with right, has yet its distinctive signification. A right is 'that which justly belongs to any one.' * * * The word [privilege] implies that some other individuals or bodies — perhaps all others — are denied participation in the right, advantage, or benefit."

Right and Privilege Used Synonymously. — Smith v. Cornell University, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 21 Misc. (N. Y.) 225.

Privilege in the Sense of Option. — See Illges v. Dexter, 77 Ga. 38; Webster v. Sturges, 7 Ill. App. 563. And see the title OPTIONS, vol. 21, p. 924.

Appurtenances and Privileges. — A water right appurtenant to a mill passes by the word "appurtenances," and a vendor is not bound to insert the word privileges in a deed for the purpose of conveying such right, though it may be contained in the contract between the vendor and vendee. Pickering v. Stapler, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 107. And see APPURTENANCE—APPURTENANT, vol. 2, p. 527.

Privilege Distinguished from Lease. — By letter a privilege of building a logging way over certain premises was conferred. No rent was reserved, and no consideration was paid for the right, which was called a privilege, and no exclusive possession of any part of the premises was conferred. It was held that there was no lease. Nowlin Lumber Co. v. Wilson, 119 Mich. 406.

Privilege — Power — Franchise. — In International Trust Co. v. American L. & T. Co., 62 Minn. 503, it was said: "A privilege, as distinguished from a mere power, is a right peculiar to the person or class of persons on whom it is conferred, and not possessed by others. As applied to a corporation, it is ordinarily used as synonymous with 'franchise,' and means a special privilege conferred by the state which does not belong to citizens generally of common right, and which cannot be enjoyed or exercised without legislative authority. Corporations usually possess many powers which are not franchises or privileges in that sense." And see FRANCHISE, vol. 14, p. 4; POWER, vol. 22, p. 1083.

In the Civil Law, a privilege is a right which the nature of the debt gives to a creditor, and which entitles him to be paid in preference to others, even those who have mortgages, from the proceeds of the thing affected with the lien. Lenel's Succession, 34 La. Ann. 870; Labouisse v. Orleans Cotton Rope, etc., Co., 43 La. Ann. 245; Carroll v. Bancker, 43 La. Ann. 1078.

In The Dolphin, 1 Flipp. (U. S.) 586, the court said: "If not analogous in all respects to our 'lien,' it authorizes the like preference in payment to claims within its scope from the proceeds in court."

Privileges and Immunities. (See also the titles CIVIL RIGHTS, vol. 6, pp. 69, 73; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, vol. 6, pp. 958, 966. And see IMMUNITY, vol. 15, p. 1028.) — The phrase "privileges and immunities," as used in the Constitution of the United States, has received construction in a large number of cases. Thus, in Coger v. North Western Union Packet Co., 37 Iowa 155, it was said: "The term privileges is comprehensive, and includes all rights pertaining to the person as a citizen of the United States."

And on the construction of this phrase, see further the following cases:

United States, — Ducat v. Chicago, 10 Wall.

(U. S.) 410; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162; In re Watson, 15 Fed. Rep. 511; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542; U. S. v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214; Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. Wisconsin. — Eingartner v. Illinois Steel Co., 94 Wis. 70.

Same — Elective Franchise. — In Van Valkenburg v. Brown, 43 Cal. 43, it was held that an elective franchise was not one of the immunities or privileges intended in the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution.

Same — Privileges and Immunities Synonymous. — Wiley v. Parmer, 14 Ala. 632; Van Valkenburg v. Brown, 43 Cal. 43; Douglass v. Stephens, 1 Del. Ch. 476; Campbell v. Morris, 3 Har. & M. (Md.) 535.

Collateral Inheritance Tax. — A statute granted to M. all the rights, powers, and privileges of a son of B. It was held that by the grant of all the privileges of a son, exemption from a collateral inheritance tax was included. Com. v. Henderson, 172 Pa. St. 135. See also the title SUCCESSION TAXES.

Exemption from Removal Except for Cause. — A state charter authorized the commissioner of police and excise to appoint boiler inspectors, who should "possess the same powers and privileges as members of the police force." It was held that a person appointed under this provision might not be removed except for cause and after notice and a hearing, as provided for by the charter in cases of members of the force. People v. Hayden, 133 N. Y. 198. See also the title PUBLIC OFFICERS, post.

Exemption from Taxation. — The word privilege includes in its ordinary definition an exemption or immunity from taxation. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Gaines, 3 Fed. Rep. 278, 2 Flipp. (U. S.) 621; Humphrey v. Pegues, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 244; Railroad Cos. v. Gaines, 97 U. S. 697; State v. Betts, 24 N. J. L. 555.

Right to Hold Property. — See Campbell v. Morris, 3 Har. & M. (Md.) 535.

Fee. — In Dillingham v. Roberts, 75 Me. 469, where a description in a deed of a parcel of land bounded the premises upon the one side by the shore of the sea at high-water mark, and then added the words: "including all the privilege of the shore to low-water mark," it was held that the fee in the land between high-water and low-water marks passed to the grantee.

Mental Power. — "The exercise of mental power cannot be a privilege, as it is not derived from any particular law granting special prerogatives contrary to common right." Lawyers' Tax Cases, 8 Heisk. (Tenn.) 649, per Turney, J.

Nisi Prius Judge. — For the construction of a statute which provided that certain nisi prius judges might interchange with each other, hold court for each other, and perform each other's duties with like privileges as the judges of certain other courts, see Pike v. Chicago, 155 Ill. 656.

Documents — Inspection Privilege — Rule of Court. — See Ehrmann v. Ehrmann, (1896) 2 Ch. 826.

Privilege of Occupying Land — Easement. — Cross v. Pike, 59 Vt. 324.

Convenient Privilege of Passing, in Sense of Convenient Way or Road. — Simpson v. Norton, 45 Me. 281.

Privilege of Reshipping. — In Broadwell v. Butler, 6 McLean (U. S.) 206, it was held that the words "privilege of reshipping," in a bill of lading, were intended for the benefit of the carrier, but did not limit his responsibility. See also Little v. Semple, 8 Mo. 99, 40 Am. Dec. 123; Carr v. Steamboat Michigan, 27 Mo. 197.

"Privilege of the Shores." — In Ripley v. Knight, 123 Mass. 515, it was held that a town's "privilege of the shores" included the right to take sand and gravel to repair its highways.

Special or Exclusive Privileges. (See also the title STATUTES.) — The Constitution of Minnesota prohibits the legislature from enacting any private law granting any special or exclusive privilege, etc. Dike v. State, 38 Minn. 366, in which case the passage of an act providing for the adjustment and determination of two alleged claims was held not to be a violation of the prohibition. See also Elk Point v. Vaughn, 1 Dak. 118; Ex p. Douglass, 1 Utah 111.

Same — Monopolies. — The term "exclusive privilege" in the prohibition in the Constitution of New York against granting to private corporations "any exclusive privilege" was intended to describe grants in the nature of monopolies, of such inherent or statutory character as to make impossible the coexistence of the same right in another. Exempt Firemen's Benev. Fund v. Roome, 93 N. Y. 328. And see the title MONOPOLIES AND CORPORATE TRUSTS, vol. 20, p. 844.

Same — Remedies. — In Lippman v. People, 175 Ill. 106, in construing a constitutional provision prohibiting the passage of any special law granting any special or exclusive privilege, the court said: "While, perhaps, no precise and comprehensive definition of the word privilege, as used in constitutions, has been attempted, the right to employ remedies for the collection of debts, the recovery of property, and the enforcement of rights has always been included in the term as used in the Federal Constitution."

VIII. EFFECT OF STATE STATUTES IN UNITED STATES COURTS, 100.

CROSS-REFERENCES.

As to Privileged Communications in the law of libel and slander, see the title LIBEL AND SLANDER, vol. 18, p. 851.

For other matters related to this subject, see the following titles in this work: ATTORNEY AND CLIENT, vol. 3, p. 278; EVIDENCE, vol. 11, p. 484; PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS, vol. 22, p. 778; WITNESSES.

I. DEFINITION. — In the law of evidence the term "privileged communications" is used to designate that class of evidence which, while relevant to the matters in dispute, is rejected by the courts or made inadmissible by statute upon the ground of public policy, because greater mischiefs would probably result from requiring or permitting its admission than from any refusal to receive it.¹

1. Definition. — See Best's Principles of Ev., §§ 49, 578; 1 Greenleaf on Ev. (14th ed.), § 236.

II. POLITICAL MATTERS — STATE SECRETS — 1. Rule Stated. — It is well established as a general rule that for reasons of state and policy matters which concern the general conduct of the affairs of the state or nation, or involve state secrets, should not be disclosed in evidence.¹

2. By Whom Question of Privilege Determined. — It has been considered that the executive or the heads of departments are the exclusive judges of the propriety of refusing to testify as to a particular matter or to produce certain documents.²

3. Possession of Documents. — A public officer may, however, be compelled to disclose whether certain documents have been in his possession or office.³

Cases Distinguished. — In White v. Nicholls, 3 How (U. S.) 266, and Howard v. Thompson, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 319, 34 Am. Dec. 238, the original letters to the President and the secretary of the treasury, which were relied on as containing libelous matter, were produced by the plaintiff, who must have obtained them by permission of the government, so that no question of compelling a disclosure arose; and in the latter case the court said that if the letters had not been surrendered by the secretary of the treasury, he could not have been compelled to produce them, and secondary evidence of their contents could not have been admitted.

The Case of Aaron Burr. — "The ruling of Chief Justice Marshall upon the trial of Aaron Burr * * * was merely that a subpoena duces tecum might be issued to the President of the United States for a letter addressed to him by a military officer who was to be a witness against the defendant; leaving the question of the production of the letter, if containing any matter which in the judgment of the President could not be disclosed without injury to the public, to be considered on the return of the subpoena. 1 Burr's Trial, 177-189. And he never had occasion to decide that question. See 2 Burr's Trial 533-539." Worthington v. Scribner, 109 Mass. 487.

Books of Bank of England Not Privileged from Production. — Heslop v. Bank of England, 6 Sim. 192.

2. Privilege a Question for Executive or Heads of Departments. — Beatson v. Skene, 5 H. & N. 838; Gugy v. Maguire, 13 L. C. Rep. 33; Thompson v. German Valley R. Co., 22 N. J. Eq. 111; Gray v. Pentland, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 23; Hartranft's Appeal, 85 Pa. St. 433, 27 Am. Rep. 667.

Document Sent by Subordinate. — In Beatson v. Skene, 5 H. & N. 838, the court said "If, indeed, the head of the department does not attend personally to say that the production will be injurious, but sends the document to be produced or not as the judge may think proper, or, as was the case in Dickson v. Wilton, 1 F. & F. 419, before Lord Campbell, where a subordinate was sent with the document with instructions to object but nothing more, the case may be different." But compare Dawkins v. Rokeby, L. R. 8 Q. B. 255, affirmed L. R. 7 H. L. 744.

Where Copy Has Been Transmitted to Party. — A provincial secretary is not deprived of the right to refuse to produce a state document, because of the fact that a copy of the same has been officially transmitted to a party in the cause by the assistant secretary. Gugy v. Maguire, 13 L. C. Rep. 33.

3. Possession of Documents. — Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 137.

III. JUDICIAL MATTERS — 1. Proceedings of Grand Jury. — The admission or exclusion of evidence as to what transpired in a grand jury room has already been discussed in this work.¹

2. Proceedings of Petit Jury. — All questions as to the admissibility of evidence concerning the proceedings of a petit jury will be discussed in another portion of this work, to which reference is made.²

3. Testimony of Judges. — It has been held that public policy authorizes a judge of a court to excuse himself from testifying as to what witnesses have testified on trials before him,³ but it furnishes no ground of exception where he has not insisted upon his right to be excused and his testimony has been admitted;⁴ and it has also been held that where the pleadings are so general and the record as given in evidence is such that it is impossible to determine by them alone the real matters tried and determined in the action, the justice before whom the action was tried may give parol evidence as to what was actually in controversy between the parties before him, and the grounds upon which his judgment was rendered, with a view to ascertaining the real issues and how they were determined.⁵ Similarly the justice who issued a process or warrant is a competent witness to prove on what papers the process issued, though he should not be asked about his reasons or his judgment in the matter.⁶

4. Testimony of Arbitrators. — As regards the effect of an award no questions can properly be put to an arbitrator or umpire for the purpose of proving the reasons or grounds for his decision, how it was arrived at, or what items it included, or what was the meaning which he intended at the time to be given to it.⁷ But the umpire or arbitrator is a competent witness, like any other person, in a legal proceeding to enforce his award, to prove matters material to the issues,⁸ and questions may properly be put to him for the purpose of proving the proceedings before him so as to arrive at what was the subject-matter of adjudication when the proceedings closed and he was about to make his award.⁹ An arbitrator is not a competent witness to prove his own misconduct¹⁰ or that of his co-arbitrators,¹¹ or to impeach his own award,¹²

English Cases. — In Reg. v. Gazard, 8 C. & P. 595, 34 E. C. L. 542, it was held that on an indictment for perjury alleged to have been committed at the quarter sessions, the chairman of the quarter sessions ought not to be called upon to give evidence as to what the defendant swore at the quarter sessions. But in Reg. v. Harvey, 8 Cox C. C. 99, Byles, J., said that the judges of the superior courts ought not, of course, to be called upon to produce their notes. If he were to be subpoenaed for such a purpose he should certainly refuse to appear. But the same objection was not applicable to the judges of the inferior courts. He saw no reason why they should not be called, and especially where, as in this case, the judge was willing to appear.

though he may be called to sustain it,¹ or to testify as to the time when and the circumstances under which he made his award.²

5. Sources of Information in Criminal Prosecutions. — In criminal prosecutions the courts will not allow persons to reveal the names of those from whom they received the information on which the prosecution is based. This rule seems to have been originally announced in reference to cases in which the government was directly concerned, such as frauds on the revenue, counterfeiting, or high treason, but it has been extended so that it can safely be said to apply at the present time to all criminal prosecutions.³ It has been held that the rule extends so as to protect a witness from answering a question as to whether he himself gave the information.⁴

IV. PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATIONS — 1. To Attorneys — a. GENERAL RULE — (1) Rule Stated. — As a general rule, every communication which the client makes to his legal adviser⁵ for the purpose of professional advice or aid upon the subject of his rights or liabilities is to be deemed confidential, and the disclosure thereof by the attorney is forbidden both by the common law and by express statutory provisions in all jurisdictions.⁶ It will readily be seen, Massachusetts. — Worthington v. Scribner, 109 Mass. 487, 12 Am. Rep. 736.

Cases Explained. — In Worthington v. Scribner, 109 Mass. 487, 12 Am. Rep. 736, the court said. "The ruling of Chief Justice Cockburn, upon an indictment for administering poison, in Reg. v. Richardson, 3 F. & F. 693, compelling a policeman to answer on cross-examination from whom he had received the information in consequence of which he found the poison in a place used by the defendant, must be maintained, if at all, upon the ground that the witness had already been examined by the government as to part of the conversation between him and the informer, and might therefore, for the protection of the defendant against any unjust inference which might be drawn from the result of such examination, be required to state the whole of that conversation. * * * In Blake v. Pilfold, 1 M. & Rob. 198, in which Mr. Justice Taunton admitted in evidence, to support an action for libel, a letter to the chief secretary of the postmaster general from a private individual, complaining of the misconduct of a guard, the objection was made by the defendant's counsel, 'on the ground that it was a privileged communication made to a public officer, and that such public officer ought not to be allowed to produce it;' the post office department had evidently suffered the letter to pass into the plaintiff's hands, for the report states that the handwriting was proved before the objection was made; and the whole attention of the judge seems to have been directed to the question whether the letter could be deemed a privileged communication upon which no action would lie. This last question was the only one touched by the other authorities cited for the plaintiff. Fairman v. Ives, 5 B. & Ald. 642, 7 E. C. L. 220; Dawkins v. Paulet, L. R. 5 Q. B. 94; O'Donoghue v. McGovern, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 26; 2 Kent Com. (6th ed.) 22."

4. Witness Need Not Answer Whether He Gave Information. — Atty.-Gen. v. Briant, 15 M. & W. 169, 15 L. J. Exch. 265; Worthington v. Scribner, 109 Mass. 487, 12 Am. Rep. 736.

Cases Opposed to the Rule. — The only cases opposed to the rule stated in the text are Rex v. Blackman, 1 Esp. 95, and Reg. v. Candy, cited in Atty.-Gen. v. Briant, 15 M. & W. 175, which were rulings at nisi prius of very little weight.

5. In this section the term "attorney" is used as a generic one, as understood in the United States. And as the privilege in England extends alike to bargisters, counselors, advocates, attorneys, solicitors, and proctors (see Slade v. Tucker, 14 Ch. D. 824, 49 L. J. Ch. 644, 43 L. T. N. S. 49, 28 W. R. 807; Wilson v. Rastall, 4 T. R. 759), no attempt is made to discriminate between them, but the term "attorney" has been adopted as covering all classes.

6. Communications to Attorney Privileged — England. — Turquand v. Knight, 2 M. & W.

however, that the mere placing of a seal on the attorney's lips would not afford any adequate protection, if the client could be placed upon the witness

Myrick*, 14 Ga. 77, in which the court held that an objection to the admissibility of the evidence of an attorney because he was forbidden to testify by the Act of 1850 was not sustainable because the suit was instituted before that act was passed and the act was prospective in its operation.

Plaintiff Suing in Forma Pauperis. — The rule providing that where application is made for leave to sue in forma pauperis the case laid before counsel and his opinion thereon shall be produced is intended only to enable the court to see whether there is a fair prima facie ground for the action, and not to allow the opposite party to see the case and opinion and thus to obtain for such opposite party a right of seeing what under other circumstances he would have no right to see. Sloane v. Britain Steamship Co., (1897) 1 Q. B. 185, 66 L. J. Q. B. D. 72, 75 L. T. N. S. 542, 45 W. R. 203.

When Error Not Prejudicial. — There is no prejudicial error in the fact that an attorney made a statement to the court of alleged privileged communications when such statement was made in the absence of the jury and was not heard by the jury. McDonald v. McDonald, 142 Ind. 55.

1. Client Cannot Be Compelled to Disclose Communications to Attorney — England. — Wentworth v. Lloyd, 10 H. L. Cas. 589, 33 L. J. Ch. 688, 10 Jur. N. S. 961, 10 L. T. N. S. 767; Lyell

(2) Reason of Rule. — Communications to attorneys and counsel are not protected from disclosure in court merely for the reason that they are made confidentially. The principle of the rule is that so numerous and complex are the laws by which the rights and duties of citizens are governed, and so important is it that they should be permitted to avail themselves of the superior skill and learning of those who are sanctioned by the law as its ministers and expounders, both in ascertaining their rights in the country and maintaining them most safely in courts, without publishing those facts which they have a right to keep secret, but which must be disclosed to a legal adviser and advocate to enable him successfully to perform the duties of his office, that the law has considered it the wisest policy to encourage and sanction this confidence by requiring that on such facts the mouth of the attorney shall be forever sealed.¹

(3) Enjoining Secrecy Unnecessary. — The rule is not restricted to such matters as may have been communicated in special confidence. The relation itself is of a confidential character, and every fact derived through the medium of it partakes of its nature.² Hence it is not necessary, in order for a client to be entitled to claim the privilege, that he should at the time of making the communication enjoin secrecy upon the attorney or even be aware of the existence of any privilege.³

(4) Communication Need Not Be in Reply to Inquiry. — So far as the question of privilege is concerned it is immaterial whether the communication was made by the client spontaneously or in reply to an inquiry from the attorney.⁴

(5) Rule Extends to Statements of Attorney. — The rule is not confined to statements by the client to the attorney, but applies with equal force to statements made and advice given by the attorney to his client.⁵

(6) Attorney of Public Officer or Municipality. — A sheriff is entitled to the same privilege in his communications with his attorney as other persons,¹ and the privilege also extends to the advice given by a corporation counsel to the various municipal boards.²

(7) Communications Between Attorneys for Same Party. — Conversations and consultations between the solicitor and the counsel for a party touching the subject-matter of the litigation are privileged.³

(8) Communication by Agent of Client. — It has been held that the rule of privilege extends to a communication by an agent to the attorney of his principal.⁴ But in such case there is no privilege as between the agent and the attorney, and the latter may testify as to such communication with the consent of the client.⁵

(9) Communications of Third Person to Whom Client Has Referred Attorney. — The privilege under the New York statute embraces only communications between the client and his attorney, and does not extend to communications to the attorney from a third person to whom the attorney has been referred by the client for information with regard to his, the client's, affairs.⁶

(10) Evidence Obtained by Attorney. — In England the evidence obtained from third persons by the solicitor, or by his direction or at his instance, even if obtained by the client, is protected from discovery or production at the instance of the opposite party, if obtained after litigation has been commenced or threatened, or with a view to the defense or prosecution of such litigation, but the privilege does not extend to information obtained by the solicitor from third persons as to a matter concerning which there is no dispute or litigation.⁷

(11) Documents Prepared for Submission to Attorney. — It has been held in England that a document prepared by a party for the bona fide purpose of being laid before his solicitor for the purpose of taking his advice in relation to an intended action is privileged from inspection by the opposite party, whether or not it was ultimately laid before the solicitor.⁸ But in a Texas case the court held that a statement prepared by the defendant in a prosecution for homicide, relating to matters alleged as the motive, which he intended to give to his counsel the next day, but which was found upon his person when arrested for the homicide, could not be regarded as a privileged communication so as to prevent its introduction in evidence on the trial.⁹

South Dakota. — Austin, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Heiser, 6 S. Dak. 429.

In several English cases the court has considered the legal advice or opinion of the solicitor privileged from production, although the cases submitted for his opinion by the client were not so. Bluck v. Galsworthy, 2 Giff. 453, 7 Jur. N. S. 91, 3 L. T. N. S. 399; Walsingham v. Goodricke, 3 Hare 122; Preston v. Carr, 1 Y. & J. 175. As the rule upon which the court in these cases held the communications of the client not privileged, viz., that they did not relate to a pending suit, is now obsolete, the cases are of little value at the present time.

9. Renfro v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1900) 56 S. W. Rep. 1013.

(12) Copies of or Extracts from Public Records. — Although prima facie privilege cannot be claimed for copies of or extracts from public records or documents which are publici juris, a collection of such copies or extracts will be privileged from production where it has been made or obtained by the professional advisers of a party for his defense to the action and is the result of the professional knowledge, research, and skill of those advisers.¹

(13) Rule Does Not Render Attorney Incompetent as Witness. — The fact that a witness is one of the attorneys in the case is no ground whatever for refusing to testify, unless the question asked tends directly to elicit some disclosure of a privileged communication between attorney and client.²

(14) No Presumption Arises from Claim of Privilege. — The fact that a client claims privilege with respect to communications between himself and his attorney does not give rise to any presumption of fact against him.³

b. RELATION OF ATTORNEY AND CLIENT MUST EXIST — (1) Rule Stated. — In order that a communication to an attorney may be privileged it is absolutely essential that the relation of attorney and client should have existed between him and the person making the communication,⁴ with reference to the matter to which the communication relates,¹ or at least that the person making the communication should have had good reason to suppose that it existed.²

Public Prosecutor. — The confidential relation of attorney and client has been held to exist between a public prosecutor and one who communicates facts to him in order to institute a prosecution,³ but this has been denied.⁴ And certainly there is no such relation between a prosecuting attorney and a witness before the grand jury.⁵

tion which he had with her as an attorney of her husband in relation to personal property which had been purchased with money derived from the sale of her separate real estate, to recover which the action was brought, as the attorney must be regarded as the attorney of both the husband and the wife.¹

(2) Person Consulted Must Actually Be an Attorney. — In order for a communication to be privileged, the person to whom it is made must actually be an attorney.² It is not enough that the person making the communication believed him to be an attorney, if he is not so in fact.³

Solicitor Who Has Ceased to Practice. — It has been held in England that a communication made to a solicitor who had ceased to practice as such was privileged where the person making the communication was a client of the firm of which the solicitor had been a member, and in the name of which his name was still retained, and the client communicated with him as a solicitor and did not know that he had ceased to practice.⁴

Solicitor of Patents. — The rule of privilege does not extend to communications made to a solicitor of patents who is not an attorney at law.⁵

(3) Attorney Must Be Consulted and Acting in Professional Capacity. — The mere fact that the person to whom the communication was made was an attorney will not render it privileged, for there are many cases in which an attorney is employed in transacting business not properly professional, but which might have been transacted by another agent. It must further appear that the attorney was consulted and acting as such and in his professional capacity, and not merely as a friend or agent of the person making the communication, or in some capacity not connected with his professional duties.⁶

Person Engaged in Practice Before Justices of the Peace. — The statements of one accused of crime, made to a person whose regular employment is practicing law before justices of the peace, and whose aid and counsel are sought as such attorney or counselor, are privileged communications, and it is error to allow such adviser to testify to the statements so made, although he has not been admitted to practice in the courts of record of the state. *Benedict v. Attorney Employed as Scrivener. — Accordingly it is usually held that the rule of privilege does not apply in the case of a person acting as a mere scrivener, although he is a member of the legal profession. Consequently an attorney who is requested to prepare a deed or mortgage, no legal advice being required, may testify as to what comes to his knowledge in connection with such transaction, and when the terms of a contract have been agreed upon between the parties, and an attorney is afterwards employed as a scrivener merely to reduce the contract to writing, and no inquiry is made of him as to its legal effect, communications made to him while thus engaged will not be regarded as privileged.¹ But the fact that an attorney does, in the course of his employment as such, draw up certain deeds, mortgages, contracts, or the like, does not take away the privilege, where this is done merely as incidental to the main purpose of his employment, which is to obtain his professional advice and assistance in reference to the matters in hand.²

Attorney Acting as Notary. — The same rule and modification apply in the case of an attorney who has performed services as a notary public.¹

(4) Communication Must Be on Account of Relation. — The communication must also be made solely on account of the relation of attorney and client, and for the purpose of obtaining professional assistance or advice, or of enabling the attorney correctly to understand the matter in relation to which he is employed so that he may manage the cause with greater skill.² Hence, it has been held that a communication made by a client to his attorney to obtain information as to a matter of fact, and not for the purpose of asking his legal advice, is not privileged.³

(5) Payment of Retainer or Fee. — As a general rule, it is considered that it is not necessary, in order to create the relation of attorney and client so as to render any communications between them privileged, that a regular retainer should be paid to the attorney,⁴ or that he should receive any fees,⁵ or make,

(6) Communications Before Employment — (a) In General. — It follows from the general rule which has been stated that communications made to an attorney before his employment as such are not privileged when made, and are not rendered so by the subsequent creation of the relation of attorney and client.²

(b) Communications with View to Employment. — There is, however, this exception, that the privilege does extend to communications made to an attorney in good faith with a view to employing him in the matter to which the communications relate or during the course of negotiations for his employment, even although the attorney declines the case, or the prospective client after hearing the attorney's advice does not further employ him.³ But there can be no privilege as to communications made after the attorney has refused to act in the matter.⁴

(7) Communications After Relation Has Ceased. — Communications voluntarily made to an attorney by his former client after the confidential relation has terminated may be proved by the testimony of the attorney,⁵ although they Proposal to Employ Attorney of Adverse Party.

— Where one party to a controversy makes to the attorney of the other party certain statements and propositions to be communicated to his client, at the same time proposing that if the latter consents to the proposition the attorney shall be employed in the matter by both parties, and the proposition is declined, the statements so made to the attorney are not privileged. *McLean v. are the same in substance as communications made while the relation existed.¹ If, however, a repetition of the information should appear to have been drawn out by an artifice for the sake of being used as evidence, it ought not to be received.²

(8) Communications to Attorney of Adverse Party. — As a general rule, communications made by one party to the attorney of the adverse party are not privileged,³ but where the attorney for the plaintiffs in an action is applied to by the defendants for advice as to their rights inter sese, the communications made to him under such circumstances are privileged.⁴

c. COMMUNICATIONS NEED NOT RELATE TO LITIGATION BEGUN OR CONTEMPLATED. — While there was at one time some doubt upon the subject, and a good many of the earlier cases refused to recognize the privilege unless the communication related to some actual legal proceedings begun or at least in contemplation at the time,⁵ it is now fully established that it is not essential to the protection of professional communications that any judicial proceeding should be actually begun or even contemplated, but it is sufficient that the communication be made to the attorney as the professional adviser of the person making it.⁶

5. Morton v. Smith, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 44 S. W. Rep. 683.

A Law Student in the attorney's office, not being necessarily either the agent or the clerk of the attorney, does not occupy such a position of confidence that communications to him are privileged.¹

f. CONFIDENTIAL CHARACTER OF COMMUNICATION. — In order for a communication from a client to an attorney to be within the rule excluding evidence thereof on the ground of public policy, it must be of a confidential character,² and so regarded, at least by the client, at the time,³ and must relate to a matter which is in its nature private and properly the subject of a confidential disclosure.⁴

g. CLIENT NEED NOT BE A PARTY TO SUIT IN WHICH EVIDENCE OFFERED. — The right of a client to prevent the disclosure by his attorney of communications confidentially made is not confined to cases where he is a party to the action in which the evidence is sought to be introduced, but the privilege applies in suits to which the client is not a party.⁵

h. ADMISSIONS OF ATTORNEY. — An attorney is not competent to make admissions in conversation with third persons which will be evidence against his clients as to the facts of his case, and hence such admissions of an attorney are not competent in evidence to bind his clients.⁶ But where the client refers a person to his attorney for the purpose of having him state the client's position with respect to any situation, thus conferring authority upon the attorney to speak for him and leaving the person seeking the information to rely upon the right of such attorney to speak for his client, the reason for the rule of privilege is wanting, and statements made by the attorney to the person so referred to him are not privileged.⁷ It has also been held that an attorney is a competent witness to state what he himself had admitted before the master at a reference.¹

i. RULE EXTENDS TO ALL KNOWLEDGE ACQUIRED BY ATTORNEY BY REASON OF RELATION. — The reason of the rule of privilege protects a client from the disclosure not only of what he has communicated to his attorney orally or in writing, but of any information or knowledge derived or acquired by the attorney from being employed as such, or by virtue of the relation, whether from words, signs, acts, or his own observation.² But there is no privilege as to what the attorney observes with reference to his client's condition at a time when he is alleged to have been intoxicated, where it does not appear that the attorney learned or had any opportunity to learn any fact not observable by all other persons who saw the client at the time, and no fact came peculiarly within the attorney's knowledge on account of his professional relation to the client.³

j. RULE AS TO DOCUMENTS — (1) Rule Stated. — If any deed or writing is intrusted by a client to his attorney in the course of any professional employment, the attorney cannot be required nor permitted to produce the papers, nor to give parol evidence of their contents, nor to testify as to anything in regard to their state or situation, where his only knowledge in regard to them has been derived from the papers themselves while in his possession by such delivery of his client, without the consent of the client himself,⁴ and such a document will be privileged, even though it can be produced in evidence without involving the attorney in any breach of professional duty, as when it has passed from his possession without his fault.¹

(2) Pleadings Which Have Never Been Filed. — It has been held that pleadings which have been prepared by an attorney and sworn to by the client, but have never been filed, are privileged.²

(3) Drafts of Pleadings. — Certainly drafts of pleadings are privileged, for though, of course, after a pleading has been filed it becomes publici juris, the drafts might disclose the precise character of confidential communications with the solicitor, by showing the alterations made from time to time.³

(4) Documents Prepared by Solicitor. — Where documents are already in existence, the mere fact of their being handed to a solicitor for the purpose of the conduct of an action cannot create a privilege. But where documents are brought into existence by a solicitor or through a solicitor for the purpose of consultation with a view to his giving professional advice or to the conduct of an action, these are in the nature of professional communications and as such are privileged.⁴

(5) Correspondence. — The rule of privilege extends to correspondence between the attorney and the client.⁵

(6) Contract. — It has also been held that admissions of the client contained in a "fee contract" with his attorney are privileged.⁶

(7) Documents Not Obtained from Client. — The rule does not ordinarily extend to writings obtained by attorneys from other sources than their clients or from third persons, whether strangers or opponents,⁷ though it has been held that an attorney who, as the attorney or counsel of one of the parties in a cause, has been intrusted with papers by a third person cannot be called upon by the opposite party to produce such papers in evidence.¹

(8) Documents Which Client Could Be Compelled to Produce. — A party cannot avoid the production of a document which is of such a nature that he could be compelled to produce it, merely by passing it over to his attorney; but in such case the fact that the papers are in the possession of the attorney does not give them any privilege, and he may be called upon to produce them.²

k. WHO MAY CLAIM PRIVILEGE — (1) Client — Personal Representative. — It is obvious that the client can object to testimony of the attorney on the ground that it involves the disclosure of privileged communications. And after the death of the client the objection may be raised by his personal representative.³

(2) Antagonist of Client. — The privilege is that of the client, and not of his antagonist in litigation, and hence such antagonist cannot raise the question of privilege where the client is willing to have his conversation with his attorney detailed in evidence.⁴

(3) Attorney. — While the attorney can raise the question as to privilege in the first instance,⁵ he cannot insist on the privilege if the client waives it⁶ or denies its existence.⁷

(4) Third Persons. — It has been held that a third person cannot object to testimony on the ground that it involves a disclosure of privileged communications between attorney and client.⁸ And the court has in one case gone so far as to hold that counsel professionally consulted may be required to testify, if the privilege be waived by the party who consulted him, although the interest in the subject-matter respecting which the confidential communication was made has passed to a third person, and he objects to the disclosure.⁹

(5) Trustee as Against Cestui Que Trust. — A trustee who consults his attorney with reference to matters in dispute or litigation between himself and the cestui que trust may claim privilege as against the latter.¹⁰ But it is otherwise as to communications between the trustee and an attorney whom he consults in reference to matters connected with the administration of his trust, for in such case the attorney is acting quite as much in the interest of the cestui que trust as of the trustee, and the latter cannot claim privilege as against the cestui with reference to such matters even in a subsequent suit between them.¹

(6) Wife as Against Husband. — It has been held in England that the correspondence of a married woman, living apart from her husband, with her solicitor in reference to a divorce, which was afterwards obtained by collusion between the husband and wife, was not privileged from production to the husband or parties claiming through him. But correspondence of the wife subsequent to the divorce, when she was acting as a feme sole, and not in relation to the matter of the divorce, was privileged.²

(7) Municipal Corporation as Against Ratepayer. — In an action by a municipal corporation against a ratepayer the defendant cannot claim that cases stated by the corporation to its attorney and his opinions thereon are not privileged from production as against him merely because he is a ratepayer and has thus contributed towards paying for those cases and opinions; though it might be otherwise if the action were with regard to some matter relating to the raising of the rates or to the expenditure thereof.³

1. BURDEN OF PROOF. — It has been held that the burden is upon the person objecting to evidence on the ground that it involves the disclosure of privileged communications to show that the case is such that the rule will apply,⁴ but it has also been asserted that there is a presumption — rebuttable, of course — that all communications between attorney and client in the course of professional employment are confidential, and hence privileged.⁵

m. QUESTION FOR COURT. — Whether or not the circumstances are such as to make the rule of privilege applicable in a particular case is a question for the court.⁶

n. LIMITATIONS OF RULE — (1) In General. — As the rule of privilege has a tendency to prevent the full disclosure of the truth, it should be limited to cases which are strictly within the principle of the policy that gave birth to it.⁷ And hence it does not extend to facts within the personal knowledge of the attorney, or information acquired by him in any other way than by confidential communications of his client or by virtue of his professional relation to the client.¹

(2) Proof Otherwise than by Attorney's Testimony. — A communication from a client to his attorney may be admitted in evidence if it can be proved otherwise than by the attorney's testimony, for it is not the communication itself that is incompetent, but the attorney is prevented from testifying concerning it.²

Communications Overheard by Others. — Thus where a conversation between a client and his attorney, which they intend to have respected as private and confidential, is overheard by a third person, such person, standing in no relation of confidence to either of the parties, may be compelled to testify to what he overheard.³

(3) Effect of Presence of Third Persons. — If an interview between an attorney and client takes place in the presence and hearing of a third person, such person may testify as to what took place.⁴ There are cases which take the view that the only effect of such person's presence is to let in his testimony and not to destroy the privilege so that the attorney can be permitted or the client compelled to testify.⁵ But the more reasonable view, and that which is supported by the weight of authority, is that the presence of a third person

(other than an interpreter or the like) utterly destroys the privilege, as the fact of the communications being made in his presence shows that they do not partake of that confidential character which is the basis of the rule of privilege.¹

Conversations and Transactions Between the Client and Other Persons in the presence of the attorney cannot be considered within the rule of privilege.²

(4) Existence and Possession of Documents. — An attorney may be required to testify as to the existence of certain documents,³ and as to whether they are in his or his client's possession, so as to lay the foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence of their contents upon a refusal to produce them.⁴ So, also, he may be asked how he obtained possession of a document,⁵ where he last saw it, or what disposition he made of it,⁶ and may even, if it is in his possession, be required to produce it for identification.⁷ The client also may be asked if he intrusted certain documents to his attorney.⁸

to disclose the address of his client, has been both affirmed¹ and denied.² The true distinction, however, would appear to be that the attorney is not protected from making such disclosure because the address became known to him in his professional character, unless it was communicated to him by the client in professional confidence for the purpose of obtaining advice.³

(10) Residence of Wards of Court.—No person, whether a professional man or not, can conceal the residence of a ward of court or do anything which will prevent the court having access to its wards and putting them under proper protection. Hence, where the mother of wards of the court had absconded with them, her solicitor was required to produce the envelopes of letters which he had received from the mother in his professional capacity, the court considering that the letters might turn out to have been posted where the mother resided and the production thereof might lead to the discovery of her residence or where she was keeping the wards of court.⁴

(11) Communications Intended to Be Transmitted to Others or Made Public.—No privilege exists as to communications which were made to the attorney for the express purpose of being by him communicated to another or made public, for the reason that from the very nature of the communications and the purpose with which they are made the conclusion is irresistible that the client intended to authorize the attorney to communicate them, and waived his privilege to have them preserved in secrecy.⁵

(12) Matters Disclosed on Trial.—The rule of privilege does not include those matters which have been from necessity, and to subserve the interests of the client, publicly disclosed by direction of the client himself on the trial of the cause, but as to such matters the attorney may testify.⁶

After Termination of Litigation.—The authority of the court to direct the plaintiff's attorney to disclose his client's address should be exercised during the pendency of the action and while the relation of attorney and client actually exists. After the relation of attorney and client has ceased so far as a particular action is concerned, by the termination of the action in a judgment for the defendant which has been affirmed on appeal, the attorney for the plaintiff cannot be compelled to disclose his late client's address for the mere purpose of enabling the defendant to pursue him aggressively by new proceedings founded on the judgment. *Walton v. (13) Agreements Between Parties. — An attorney may testify as to agreements between his client and his adversary,¹ and also as to a proposition which was made to compromise the matter in dispute.²

(14) Execution of Deeds, etc. — There is no privilege as to the fact of the attorney having drawn a certain deed, mortgage, or other instrument for his client,³ or as to the client's having executed the same,⁴ or its delivery,⁵ especially where the attorney was one of the attesting witnesses,⁶ or took the acknowledgment thereof as a notary.⁷

(15) Swearing to Pleadings. — The rule of privilege does not exclude evidence of the client having sworn to certain pleadings⁸ or to an affidavit.⁹

(16) Handling of Client's Funds or Property. — An attorney may be required to testify as to what money he has received and paid over for his client, to whom he has paid it,¹⁰ what money or property of the client he has in his possession,¹¹ or what disposition he has made of the client's money or property.¹²

(17) Where Attorney a Party to Transaction. — There is no privilege where the attorney is himself a party to the transaction or agreement which he is called upon to disclose.¹³

Where Attorney and Client Engaged in Wrongful Act. — Hence, when the attorney and client both engage in committing a wrongful act, the client cannot prevent a disclosure of the transactions by the attorney, on the ground that the latter became acquainted with the facts connected with it as his legal adviser.¹⁴

Violation of Professional Duty. — In a case where the plaintiff's attorney had brought an action upon knowledge which he had obtained as counsel for the defendants or some of them, and had gone upon the stand and in violation of his duty as an attorney disclosed knowledge which he had acquired as such attorney for the defendants, it was held that he could not object to the question whether he was interested in the result of the action to the extent of a share of the recovery on the ground that this called for a disclosure of the relations between attorney and client. Eastman v. Kelly, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 1 N. Y. Supp. 866.

testator and the attorney employed by him to prepare his will,¹ the more generally accepted doctrine is that the rule does not apply in the case of litigation between the heirs, legatees, devisees, or personal representatives of a testator concerning the disposition of his property, the genuineness of a propounded will, the validity of the will, and the like, but in such case the attorney of the testator is fully competent to testify to the directions he received as to the disposition of the testator's property, facts throwing light on the questions of mental capacity and undue influence, circumstances attending the execution of the testamentary paper, and the like.²

Where the Attorney Is a Witness to the Will all the cases agree that the rule of privilege does not apply.³

(19) Communications by Administrator Respecting Estate. — In a case where, after the death of a wife, her husband consulted with an attorney with a view to taking out letters of administration on his wife's estate, and handed to the attorney papers belonging to the wife, among which was a certain deed, it was held that the attorney might testify as to the delivery of the papers, the date of the delivery, by whom they were delivered, and in what condition they were found after the wife's death.⁴

4. Turner v. Warren, 160 Pa. St. 336, 34 W. N. C. (Pa.) 245.

(20) Communications in Contemplation of Crime or Fraud — Crime. — There is no privilege as to communications made to an attorney by a client who contemplates the commission of a crime, for the purpose of being guided or helped in its commission or escaping the consequences thereof.¹

Fraud. — Upon the same line of reasoning the privilege is very generally considered not to extend to communications concerning a fraud which the client proposes to perpetrate and as to which he wishes advice or assistance,² though this has been denied in a few cases.³

Acts Done Towards the Perpetration of a Fraud, in the presence of the attorney of the perpetrator, are not privileged, though communications to the attorney beforehand as to the means, expediency, or consequences of committing the fraud may be. Coveny v. Tannahill, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 33, 37 Am. Dec. 287.

Overruled Cases. — So far as they hold that professional privilege extends to transactions for an illegal or fraudulent purpose, Cromack v. Heathcote, 2 Brod. & B. 4, 6 E. C. L. 12, Rex v. Smith, 1 Phil. & Arn. on Ev. 118, and Doe v. Harris, 5 C. & P. 592, 24 E. C. L. 468, are expressly overruled in Reg. v. Cox, 14 Q. B. D. 153. And the same case may be re-

Communications After the Crime Is Committed or the Fraud Perpetrated, with reference thereto, are within the general rule as to privilege and must not be disclosed.¹

(21) Where Attorney Becomes Subscribing Witness. — It has been held that there is no privilege where an attorney becomes a subscribing witness to a deed or other writing, as in such case he assumes another character than that of attorney, for the occasion, and adopts all the duties which it imposes, and hence is bound to give evidence of all that any other subscribing witness could be required to prove.²

(22) Question Whether Certain Facts Communicated to Attorney. — Asking a witness on cross-examination whether he had ever communicated to his attorney a fact to which he had testified, is not a violation of the rules as to privileged communications.³

(23) Suit to Set Aside Purchase by Attorney from Client. — It has been held that in a suit by the heir and general devisee of the client against the devisees and executors of the solicitor to set aside a purchase by him from his client on the grounds of its having been at an undervalue and the client having been in embarrassed circumstances at the time, the executor of the solicitor could not claim privilege against the real representative of the vendor for any documents as confidential communications with the vendor.⁴

(24) Suit for Accounting Between Attorneys in Partnership. — It has been considered in England that in a suit by the representatives of a deceased solicitor for the taking of a partnership account between the decedent and a solicitor with whom he was in partnership, the plaintiffs were entitled to the discovery and production in the usual way of papers material to the account, although such papers related to professional business transacted for their client.⁵

(25) Disclosure for Protection of Attorney. — The rule of privilege will not be enforced to the prejudice of the attorney or when it would prevent his obtaining or adequately defending his rights, as, for example, when the client charges him with mismanagement of his cause, or fraud, or other improper or unprofessional conduct.⁶

o. WAIVER AND LOSS OF PRIVILEGE — (1) In General. — The privilege belongs to the client and not to the attorney,⁷ and hence it makes no differgarded as disapproving Holt v. Tyrrel, Bull. N. P. 284a; Anonymous, Skin. 404, and Hyde v. McCartney, 2 Molloy 544.

In Matthews v. Hoagland, 48 N. J. Eq. 455, the court said that the recent case of Reg. v. Cox, 14 Q. B. D. 153, had so undermined the authorities which Chancellor Walworth felt constrained to follow in Utica Bank v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 528, 49 Am. Dec. 189, that "We are forced to the conclusion that had the decisions stood at that time as they do now he would have held as he thought principle and the character of the profession demanded;" and in this case the court further showed that Foster v. Hall, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 89, 22 Am. Dec. 400, so far as regards its authority for the rule that communications in contemplation of fraud are privileged, was based upon English law since overruled.

If the Client Is Not a Party to the suit in which it is proposed to have his attorney testify, so as to be able to communicate an express or tacit relinquishment of his privilege, the lips of his attorney must remain closed and the court cannot allow him to speak of that which the policy of the law has prohibited him from disclosing. *Hodges v. action or suit in reference to which it was made,¹ nor by the termination of the relation of attorney and client,² nor by the death of the client,³ nor by the attorney's subsequently becoming interested in the subject-matter to which the communications related.⁴

Case Explained. — In Snow v. Gould, 74 Me. 540, the court said that privileged communications may lose their privileged character by the lapse of time, as that which may be private at one time may not be private at a subsequent time; adding by way of illustration that directions to an attorney to make a certain contract are a confidential communication before, but not after, the contract is made, and likewise a solicitor cannot be compelled to disclose the contents of an answer in equity before it is filed, but may be compelled to do so afterwards. But the illustrations given seem to fall within one of the well-recognized limitations to the rule of privilege. See supra, this subsection, n. Where the Privilege Belongs to Several Clients, it cannot be waived by any one of them or even a majority, contrary to the expressed will of the others, but all must concur in order to make a legal waiver.¹

(b) Heirs at Law or Devises. — It has also been held that the privilege may be waived by the heirs at law² or devisees of the client.³

(c) Personal Representatives. — So, also, it has been held that the executor or administrator of a deceased client may exercise in favor of the client's estate the right to waive the privilege, and may call upon the attorney to disclose as a witness communications made to him by the client.⁴

(3) How Waived — (a) Whether Waiver May Be Implied. — The general rule is that a waiver of the privilege may be implied,⁵ though, of course, it must clearly appear that it is the intention of the client to waive the protection of the rule.⁶

The New York Code originally provided that an attorney should not be allowed to disclose communications to him in the course of his employment, unless such provision should be "expressly waived by the client,"⁷ but this provision was rather liberally construed,⁸ and thereafter the code was amended so that the prohibition should apply unless "expressly waived upon the trial or examination" by the client.⁹

(b) Pleading Privileged Matter. — In England it is held that a party does not lose the protection against producing privileged documents by referring to the same in his pleadings,¹⁰ and that even where a part of such a document is set out in an answer and the remainder referred to, the privilege is lost only as to the part set out, and not as to the remainder.¹¹

In the United States, however, the rule has been held to be that when a defendant enters upon a line of defense which involves what passed between himself and his attorney he waives his right to object to the attorney giving his own account of the matter.¹²

(c) Introduction of Testimony. — The client does not waive the privilege by testifying generally in the cause¹³ nor by introducing the attorney as a witness

Georgia Rule. — In O'Brien v. Spalding, 102 Ga. 490, 66 Am. St. Rep. 202, the court said: "By no means is a client permitted, under our statute, to waive the protection it affords. The Act of 1887 is clear upon this point." See also Lewis v. State, 91 Ga. 168.

8. What Amounts to Express Waiver. — In Matter of Coleman, 111 N. Y. 220, it was held that where the attorney became the attesting witness to the will at the request of the testator the prohibition was "expressly waived" within the meaning of the code, and the attorney was competent to testify as to all of the circumstances attending the execution of the instrument.

with reference to matters other than the confidential communications to him,¹ but the privilege is waived where the client introduces the confidential matter in evidence either by testifying to it himself² or by offering the attorney as a witness to prove the communications made to him.³

(d) Turning State's Evidence. — It has been held that where a person accused, jointly with others, of a crime, turns state's evidence, and testifies against the others, he thereby waives all privilege against the disclosure of communications between himself and his attorney touching the offense charged, and both he and the attorney may be compelled to disclose such communications, at the instance of either the prosecution or the defense.⁴ But in other jurisdictions the courts have refused to adopt this view.⁵

(4) Partial Waiver. — It has been held that where privilege has been claimed for a number of documents a waiver thereof in respect to some of them does not preclude the party from claiming his privilege as to the remainder.⁶

2. To Physicians — a. IN GENERAL. — Communications from a patient to his physician were not privileged at common law;⁷ but on considerations of public policy⁸ statutes have been enacted in most jurisdictions forbidding the disclosure in evidence, against the will of the patient, of information acquired by physicians in their professional capacity.⁹

Where the Relation Is Such that No Confidence Is Reposed, there is none to be abused, and hence the physician may testify. Scripps v. Foster, 41 Mich. 742.

Where the Whole Testimony of a Physician Is Excluded on the ground that he cannot separate impressions received by him growing out of the relation of physician and patient and those received by observations of the patient when that relation did not exist, the fact justifying such exclusion must appear. Previous Acquaintance Not Necessary Between Physician and Patient.—Grattan v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., 24 Hun (N. Y.) 43.

should have been employed by the patient, for if this were necessary the fact that physicians are frequently called in by other physicians, or by friends or even strangers, would, to a large extent, destroy the usefulness of the statutes.¹

(b) Physician Employed by Person Responsible for Injury to Another. — Thus, where the person who is responsible for an accident by which another has been injured, sends a physician employed and paid by him to attend the injured person, the rule of privilege applies in full force;² but it is otherwise where the physician is sent merely to ascertain the extent of the injury, or the circumstances attending the accident, with a view to a possible claim for damages, and gives the injured person no reason to believe that he intends to treat him professionally or that he is acting otherwise than in the interest of the person by whom he is sent.³

(c) Physician Sent to Examine Prisoner. — Similarly the privilege does not apply where a physician is sent by the prosecuting attorney to examine into and make a report as to the mental and physical condition of a prisoner,⁴ though it is otherwise if the prisoner is led to believe that the object of the visit is to give him professional attendance of which he stands in need.⁵

(3) Person Consulted Must Actually Be Physician. — It has been held in New York, under the wording of the statute in that state, that in order for the rule of privilege to apply against the testimony of a witness it must appear that he was "duly authorized to practice physic or surgery" according to the law of the state.⁶

(4) Physician Must Be Acting Professionally. — That information acquired by a physician may be privileged, he must have been acting professionally when he acquired the information.⁷

The first case was, however, disapproved in Kling v. Kansas City, 27 Mo. App. 231, in which case the court held that the test of whether information acquired by a physician is privileged is how it was acquired, and it matters not that it could have been acquired in a different way.

The Fact that a Physician Gave No Prescription

(5) Who Are Patients. — The term "patient" in a statute prohibiting physicians from disclosing information acquired in attending a patient includes persons under a disability such as infancy, lunacy, etc.¹

c. COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN PHYSICIANS ATTENDING SAME PATIENT. — The privilege is not limited to communications with the patient, but applies in all its force to communications between physicians attending or consulting in the same case.²

d. MEDIA OF COMMUNICATION BETWEEN PHYSICIAN AND PATIENT. — Disclosures of confidential communications between physician and patient cannot be made by other persons whose intervention is strictly necessary to enable the parties to communicate with each other.³

e. WHAT MATTERS ARE PRIVILEGED — (1) Rule Extends to All Information Acquired Professionally. — The prohibition against a physician's divulging information acquired while attending a patient excludes his examination as to any information so acquired, whether actually obtained from statements of the patient, or of others present at the time, or gathered from his professional or surgical examination.⁴

(2) Ailments of Patient. — A physician will not be allowed to disclose the nature of the disease or ailment for which he treated the patient.⁵ And it has been held that the prescriptions of a physician for his patient could not be introduced in evidence or their ingredients explained.⁶

(3) Previous State of Health. — A physician cannot be allowed to testify as to his patient's previous state of health where his only knowledge is acquired from an inspection of and conversations with the patient as his physician.⁷

(4) Whether Information Must Be Necessary for Treatment. — The privilege is very generally restricted to information necessary to enable the physician to prescribe for or treat the patient;¹ but the tendency of the courts is towards a liberal construction of this rule,² and the presumption is that the information would not have been imparted except for the purpose of aiding the physician in prescribing for the patient.³

The Word "Necessary" should not be construed to exclude information in good faith asked for or given to enable intelligent treatment, although it may appear that some of the information was not strictly essential.⁴

Similarly the Word "Prescribe" in such a statute should be given as liberal and enlarged an effect as the word itself will bear in the connection found.⁵

A More Liberal View has been announced by the Supreme Court of Indiana, which has practically considered all information given by the patient in response to inquiries of the physician privileged.⁶

f. WHO MAY CLAIM PRIVILEGE. — The privilege may be claimed by the patient or his personal representatives,⁷ or the beneficiary in a policy of insurance on the life of the patient.⁸

g. BURDEN OF PROOF. — The party claiming the benefit of the statutory privilege must show the facts which bring the case within the statute.⁹

h. LIMITATIONS OF RULE — (1) Fact of Attendance. — The fact that a doctor is the family physician of a certain person or attended him professionally, and the dates and number of his visits are not, as a general rule, within the prohibition of the statute, and the physician may be permitted to testify thereto.¹ But it has been held that where in an action on an insurance policy the defense was a breach of warranty or false representations on the part of the insured in his application consisting in statements that he was in good health, whereas, as a matter of fact, he was suffering from a disease of the throat and tongue, it was error to allow certain physicians to testify that they were specialists in such diseases and had been called upon by the insured for professional treatment, as this violated the spirit of the statute.²

(2) Testamentary Matters. — It has been held that in disputes between parties all of whom claim under a decedent as heirs at law, devisees, legatees, or personal representatives, either party may call the attending physician of the decedent as a witness, and the rule of privilege does not apply.³

In New York the rule as established by statute is that upon a trial or examination the physician of a deceased patient may disclose any information acquired in attending the deceased as to his mental or physical condition, except confidential communications and such facts as would tend to disgrace his memory, when the provisions of the statute have been waived on the trial, or when the validity of his will is in question, by the executor named in the will or his surviving spouse, or any of his heirs, next of kin, or other party in interest.⁴

(3) Communications for Unlawful Purpose. — The privilege does not apply to communications for an unlawful purpose.⁵ But in the absence of any showing to the contrary the presumption must be indulged that the communication was made for a lawful purpose and is therefore privileged.⁶

(4) Inquisition in Lunacy. — It has been held in New York that the statutory provision prohibiting a physician from disclosing information acquired while attending a physician in a professional capacity does not apply in an inquisition as to the lunacy of the patient.⁷

(5) Effect of Presence of Third Persons. — The fact that a third person was present at the time a physician learned certain matters concerning his patient does not render the physician competent to testify thereto,⁸ though the third person may testify.⁹

Partner of Physician Consulted. — Where two physicians are partners, one who is present at a consultation between the other and a patient cannot testify as to what took place during such consultation.¹

(6) Rule in Criminal Proceedings. — Statutes extending privilege to physicians are applicable in criminal proceedings as well as civil,² unless the matter as to which it is sought to introduce the testimony of the physician would throw light upon the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, in which case the privilege does not apply.³

(7) Autopsy. — A physician may be examined as to an autopsy of the body of a person who was not his patient in life.⁴

(8) Proofs of Death. — It has been held that statements or affidavits of the attending physician of a deceased person furnished to an insurance company with the proofs of death are not privileged.⁵ But it has also been held that the certificate of an attending physician filed with a city board of health as to the cause of the death of certain relatives of the person insured was not admissible in an action upon a policy of life insurance, although the defense was a breach of warranty that such relatives of the insured had not died of consumption.⁶

(9) Hypothetical Questions. — A physician who has attended a patient may give an opinion as a witness upon a hypothetical state of facts expressed in a question which excludes all knowledge of the condition of the patient derived while in professional attendance.⁷

(10) Disclosures for Protection of Physician. — Where the patient sues the physician for malpractice the rule of privilege does not apply as to matters connected with the treatment of the injury or disease or the operation in reference to which the malpractice is alleged, but all these matters may be fully disclosed.⁸ The mere interposition by the patient of a general denial in an action brought against him by the physician for payment of his services does not, however, prevent the application of the rule of privilege.⁹

i. WAIVER AND LOSS — (1) In General. — The privilege with reference to information acquired by a physician in the performance of his professional duties, like the privilege with reference to communications to an attorney, remains in force until removed by the client or his representatives.¹⁰ It does not cease upon the termination of the relation by the death of either the patient¹ or the physician.²

(2) Who May Waive — (a) The Patient. — As the privilege is that of the patient and not of the physician,³ it follows that the patient may waive it whenever he sees fit to do so.⁴ And this right to waive the statutory privilege is not dependent upon any statute expressly allowing the waiver.⁵

(e) Beneficiary in Insurance Policy. — The beneficiary in a policy of life insurance may, in an action thereon, waive the privilege attaching to communications between the insured and his physician.¹

(f) Proponents of Will. — The proponents of a will may, it has been held, waive the privilege as to evidence of the testator's physician.²

(g) New York Rule Where Validity of Will in Question. — The New York rule, in controversies about a will, is fixed by statute and has been already stated.³

(3) How Waived — (a) Whether Waiver May Be Implied. — A waiver of the benefit of the rule excluding the testimony of a physician may be implied,⁴ unless, as is the case in New York, it is required by statute to be express.⁵

(b) Provision in Insurance Policy or Application. — An applicant for insurance may waive the privilege by a stipulation to that effect in his application.⁶ There is nothing against public policy in such waiver,⁷ and it will be binding upon all who claim under the contract of insurance.⁸

The Present New York Statute, which requires the privilege to be "expressly waived upon the trial or examination," precludes a waiver in such manner.⁹

(c) Introduction of Testimony. — A patient waives the privilege where he testifies as to privileged matters¹⁰ or calls the physician to testify thereto.¹¹ But there is no waiver involved in his going on the stand and testifying generally or offering the physician as a general witness.¹² The privilege as against the testimony of one physician with reference to information acquired by him which is within the privilege is not waived by calling another physician to testify as to other and totally distinct privileged matters.¹³

13. Testimony of Other Physicians — Indiana. — Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Wiler, 100 Ind. 92, 50 Am. Rep. 769.

(a) Failure to Object Seasonably to Testimony. — It is too late, after the testimony of a physician has been received without objection, to raise the question of competency by a motion to strike out.¹

(4) Effect of Waiver at One Trial on Subsequent Trial. — It has been held that the fact that a party on one trial of a case waived his privilege does not preclude him from claiming the privilege on a subsequent trial,² but the contrary view has also been asserted.³

3. To Spiritual Advisers — a. IN GENERAL. — Though the cases are by no means uniform, the more generally accepted view is that confidential communications in the nature of confessions made to a priest or clergyman are not privileged at common law.⁴ But such communications are now made privileged by statute in many jurisdictions.⁵

b. REPLIES OF SPIRITUAL ADVISER. — It has been held that such a statute also excludes the replies of the spiritual adviser.⁶

c. CONFIDENTIAL NATURE OF STATEMENTS. — Such a statute does not preclude a minister of the gospel from testifying as to statements to him which were not of a confidential nature and were not made for the purpose of obtaining his advice or assistance.⁷

d. CHURCH DISCIPLINE. — The privilege with regard to clergymen usually extends only to confessions made to them in the course of discipline enjoined by the church.⁸

Testimony of Physician Employed by Other Party. — The plaintiff in an action for damages for personal injuries does not waive his privilege as to his own physician because the defendant has examined its own doctor sent to the plaintiff to look after its interests and incidentally to attend to the plaintiff's wounds. *Jones v. In Reg. v. Hay, 2 F. & F. 4, a priest was asked from whom he received a watch which was identified as stolen property, and objected to answering on the ground that he received it in connection with the confessional, but Kill, J., ruled that he must answer the question, saying that the priest was merely asked to answer a question as to something done out of the confession.

Contrary Opinion. — In Reg. v. Griffin, 6 Cox C. C. 219, Alderson, B., thought such communications privileged, but said: "I do not lay this down as an absolute rule; but I think such evidence ought not to be given." To the same effect are Du Barre v. Livette, Peake N. P. (ed. 1795) 77; Broad v. Pitt, 3 C. & P. 518, 14 E. C. L. 423.

e. WAIVER AND LOSS. — The privilege, like other statutory privileges of this character, may be waived by the person confessing, but remains forever unless it is removed by him.¹

4. Experts in Patent Cases. — While there is little, if any, express authority dealing with the question to what extent, if at all, communications passing between counsel and client on the one side and the so-called "expert" on the other are privileged, the conditions of patent litigation are such that a similar public policy would seem to require an extension of the doctrine of privilege to meet such a case. But when the expert ceases to act as counsel, and allows himself to be made a witness, the privilege will be lost, at least to the extent to which he testifies.²

V. COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE — 1. General Rule —

a. RULE STATED. — The preservation of the sacredness and confidence of the matrimonial relation being a matter of public policy,³ the disclosure by either the husband or the wife of confidential communications between them during the existence of that relation is prohibited both under the common law and by express statutory provisions.⁴

b. EFFECT OF STATUTES MAKING HUSBAND AND WIFE COMPETENT WITNESSES. — This rule has not been in any way affected by the statutes which have been enacted, making the husband and wife competent witnesses for or against each other,¹ or permitting parties in interest to testify.²

c. RULE DOES NOT AFFECT COMPETENCY AS WITNESSES. — Statutes creating this privilege do not affect the competency of husband and wife as witnesses for each other, but they may testify as to any matter whatever of which they have knowledge, except as to admissions and conversations during the existence of the marriage relation.³

d. NECESSITY FOR VALID MARRIAGE. — In order for communications between persons living together as husband and wife to be privileged, there must be a valid marriage between them. There is no privilege where one of such persons has been previously married to a third person who is still living and not divorced.⁴

e. COMMUNICATIONS MUST HAVE BEEN WHILE MARRIAGE RELATION EXISTED. — After the marriage relation has ceased the husband and wife are competent witnesses for or against each other as to facts which did not come to them while that relation existed.⁵

f. INJUNCTION OF SECRECY NOT NECESSARY. — It is not necessary that there should be any injunction of secrecy on the part of the spouse who makes the communication.⁶

g. DOCUMENTS AND LETTERS. — As a general rule, letters passing between husband and wife are protected,⁷ as are also documents intrusted by one spouse to the custody of the other.⁸

A Paper Addressed "To All Whom It May

h. RULE INCLUDES ALL KNOWLEDGE ACQUIRED BY VIRTUE OF RELATION. — The rule excluding the testimony of husband or wife as to confidential communications between them during the marriage relation is not confined to mere spoken or written communications, but extends to all information which is acquired by either spouse during the marriage and by reason of its existence.¹

i. CONFIDENTIAL NATURE. — The more generally accepted rule is that only such matters as are confidential in their nature are excluded,² but in a few states evidence of all communications between husband and wife is excluded, even those which are not confidential.³

j. APPLICATION OF RULE IN CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS. — The application of the rule under consideration is not confined to civil cases, but applies as well where the husband or wife is on trial under a charge of crime committed against a third person,⁴ but in some states the rule does not apply in the case of a prosecution of one spouse for a crime by which the other is injured.⁵ And it has also been held that on the trial of an indictment for forgery the Concern," written by a wife and containing a statement as to the cause of her separation from her husband, is admissible in evidence where there is nothing to show that it was intended as a private communication between husband and wife other than the fact that it was found among the husband's papers after his death. *Hoyt v. wife of the defendant may testify that he made her sign the name on the forged instrument.¹

k. CIVIL ACTIONS BETWEEN SPOUSES. — While in some states the rule of privilege is held to be applicable in all its force in the case of a civil action between the spouses,² in others it has been relaxed so as to make the rule not applicable in such cases,³ especially in suits for divorce.⁴

2. Limitations of Rule — a. EFFECT OF PRESENCE OF THIRD PERSONS. — Conversations between husband and wife or admissions made by one to the other in the presence of third persons are not privileged,⁵ and such communications may be testified to by either the husband or wife⁶ or by the others who were present.⁷ So, also, communications between one spouse and a third person in the presence of the other spouse are not privileged.⁸

Conversation in Presence of Children. — Where a conversation between husband and wife has been had in the presence of no other person except their family of young children, who are not shown to have taken any part in or paid any attention to the conversation, it must be deemed a private conversation between husband and wife and is privileged.⁹

b. CONVERSATIONS OVERHEARD BY OTHERS. — A confidential conversation between a husband and wife may be given in evidence by a person who overheard the same, even though he was an eavesdropper or had concealed himself for the purpose of listening.¹⁰

Fact of Third Person's Presence. — A husband or wife who is called to testify as to such a communication or act is also competent to testify as to the known presence, hearing, or knowledge of a third person. McCague v. Miller, 36 Ohio St. 595.

The Fact that the Third Person Is Dead at the time of the trial does not preclude the husband or wife from testifying as to communications in his presence or hearing. Sessions v. Trevitt, 39 Ohio St. 259.

Privilege Exists as to Conversation in Presence of Fourteen-year-old Daughter. — Lyon v. Prouty, 154 Mass. 488. In this case the court said further: "Nothing in this case shows * * * that the conversation was confidential."

10. Conversations Overheard by Others. — State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 36 Am. Rep. 89;

c. DECLARATIONS TO THIRD PERSONS. — Statutes prohibiting husband and wife from testifying as to communications with each other relate to testimony by the husband or wife, and not to the testimony of third persons as to declarations made by either spouse against the other.¹

d. LETTERS IN HANDS OF THIRD PERSONS. — Notwithstanding the rule that letters between husband and wife are privileged, it has been repeatedly held that where such a letter has come into the hands of a third person it may be produced in evidence,² but there are, on the other hand, a number of cases in which this has been denied.³

e. FACTS WITHIN PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE. — A husband or wife may, of course, testify to any and all matters of fact within his or her personal knowledge, and not communicated to him or her by his or her spouse during the existence of the marriage relation, or ascertained by reason of that relation.⁴

f. FACT OF MARRIAGE. — It has been held that where the husband and wife have been made competent witnesses for or against each other by statute, either may testify as to the fact of marriage, though the statute prohibits the disclosure of confidential communications.⁵

g. PERSONAL INJURIES. — It has been asserted that a wife may testify to any injury to her person either before or after marriage, and while the relation exists.⁶

h. SANITY OF SPOUSE. — Where insanity is set up as a defense in a trial for murder, the wife of the defendant may be asked if she ever saw anything to indicate that he was of unsound mind.⁷

i. RULE IN CASES OF FRAUD. — Where the husband has been made the instrument of a third person to perpetrate a fraud upon the wife and obtain a deed of trust or other incumbrance upon her real estate, both the husband and the wife are competent to testify in relation to conversations between themselves concerning the transaction for the purpose of showing fraud, and the third person cannot object that the case falls within the rule respecting confidential communications between husband and wife.⁸

j. BUSINESS NEGOTIATIONS. — Negotiations between a husband and wife prior to and resulting in the conveyance of land from the husband to the wife are not in any sense privileged.⁹

k. WHERE HUSBAND ACTING AS AGENT FOR WIFE. — It has been held that the rule of privilege does not apply to communications between husband and wife in regard to a business matter in which he is acting as her agent,¹ but there are also cases which consider the rule applicable under such circumstances.²

7. DYING DECLARATIONS. — The statute prohibiting husband and wife from testifying as to communications with each other does not apply where, on the trial of a person charged with killing the husband, it is sought to prove by the wife the dying declarations of the husband made to her.³

m. VOLUNTARY DISCLOSURES. — It has been held that a statute providing that no husband or wife "shall be compellable to disclose" confidential communications from the other spouse prohibited a compulsive disclosure only and not a voluntary disclosure.⁴

3. Waiver and Loss of Privilege — a. WHETHER PRIVILEGE MAY BE WAIVED. — Under the common law, and under some of the statutes, the privilege is absolute, and no waiver is effectual to remove the seal from the lips of either spouse,⁵ but in a great many jurisdictions the rule is now established that the privilege may be waived.⁶

b. WHO MAY WAIVE. — In some jurisdictions it is held that the privilege may be waived by the spouse who made the communication which it is sought to disclose,⁷ while in others the concurrence of both spouses is deemed necessary for a waiver.⁸

c. HOW WAIVED. — The privilege is waived by going on the stand and testifying as to the privileged communication,⁹ or calling the spouse to testify thereto,¹⁰ but it is not waived by testifying generally in the cause.¹¹ And it has been held that the privilege is waived by a failure seasonably to object to the introduction in evidence of the prohibited matter.¹²

d. PRIVILEGE NOT LOST BY TERMINATION OF RELATION. — The privilege is not lost by the termination of the marriage relation, whether by death or divorce.¹³

But it has been held otherwise with respect to a letter concerning the subject-matter of the litigation, written by one of the defendants to another with the direction to send it on to their joint solicitor. Jenkyns v. Bushby, L. R. 2 Eq. 547, 35 L. J. Ch. 820, 12 Jur. N. S. 558, 15 L. T. N. S. 310. But compare Goodall v. Little, 1 Sim. N. S. 155, 20 L. J. Ch. 132, 15 Jur. 309.

And it has also been held that where one of the defendants is a solicitor and has acted as agent for the solicitor of record to collect evidence, the letters passing between him and his codefendant are privileged. Hamilton v. Nott, L. R. 16 Eq. 112, 42 L. J. Ch. 512.

privileged, but may be given in evidence.¹

2. Communications with View to Litigation. — It is held in England that opinions or reports of an officer of a company obtained by the company confidentially with a view to litigation are privileged from production.²

3. Statements Obtained to Be Submitted to Attorney. — It has also been held that a statement submitted by an agent to his principal at the request of the latter for the purpose of being laid before a solicitor or attorney for his advice or opinion for guidance in litigation was privileged.³

4. Communications to Agent to Enable Him to Communicate with Attorney. — Confidential communications made by a person living abroad to his agent in England for the purpose of enabling such agent to communicate directly with an English solicitor with reference to a pending suit to which the person making the communication was a party have been held to be privileged.⁴

5. Telegraphic Despatches. — Telegraphic despatches are not privileged communications, but their production in evidence by the telegraph company, or the operator, or custodian, may be compelled.⁵

question of privilege is raised in a federal court, the decision must be governed by the statutes on that subject of the state in which the federal court sits.¹

PRIVILEGE OF RENEWAL. — See RENEWAL, and see the titles LANDLORD AND TENANT, vol. 18, p. 149; LEASES, vol. 18, p. 593.

PRIVY — PRIVIES — PRIVITY. (See also such titles as ADMISSIONS, vol. 1, p. 680; ADVERSE POSSESSION, vol. 1, p. 842; CONTRACTS, vol. 7, p. 104; COVENANTS, vol. 8, pp. 135, 147; ESTOPPEL, vol. 11, pp. 390, 394; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. 11, p. 720; JOINT TENANTS AND TENANTS IN COMMON, vol. 17, p. 646; NOTICE OF PENDENCY AND LIS PENDENS, vol. 21, p. 591; RES JUDICATA. And see the ENCVC. OF PL. AND PR., vols. 2, p. 1021; 7, p. 857; 9, p. 611.) — The term "privity" denotes mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property; and privies are those who stand in this relationship, and are distributed into several classes according to the manner thereof. Thus, there are privies in estate, as donor and donee, lessor and lessee, and joint tenants; privies in blood, as heir and ancestor, and co-parceners; privies in representation, as executors and testator, administrators and intestate; privies in law, where the law, without privity of blood or estate, casts the land upon another as by escheat.²

Overruled Cases. — The cases of Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 457, and Liggett v. Glenn, 4 U. S. App. 438, in so far as they conflict with the rule stated in the text must be considered as overruled. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Robison, 19 U. S. App. 266.

A privity is said to be one who has an interest in an action or thing. Pickett v. Ford, 4 How. (Miss.) 249.

One Who Buys Land Subject to the Lien of a Judgment cannot impeach the judgment or avoid the lien on any ground which would not have availed the defendant to prevent the rendition of the judgment. Stoutimore v. Clark, 70 Mo. 471.

Purchaser at Tax Sale. — One who acquires real estate pursuant to a tax sale is not in privity with the former owner. O'Donnell v. McIntyre, 118 N. Y. 162.

The Privy of the Surety with His Principal is in the contract alone and not in the action. Giltinan v. Strong, 64 Pa. St. 246. See also McConnell v. Poor, 113 Iowa 133.

There is no privity existing between a guardian, executor, or administrator, and the surety on his official bond. Lipscomb v. Postell, 38 Miss. 477.

Successive Executors, Etc. — In Hummel v. Central City First Nat. Bank, 2 Colo. App. 581, the court said: "It would require a great stretch of the doctrine and the definition of the authorities on this subject to hold that successive executors and successive administrators and representatives of other sorts were privies in legal contemplation. Yet it was held by a very learned court in Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. (U. S.) 44, that the administrator de bonis non did so sustain that legal relation to his predecessor in the same trust, as to be bound, probably, by any judgments rendered against that predecessor. It was put in that case, however, on the principle and reason of an 'official succession or privity.' The rule cannot be extended beyond the doctrine of that case."

Suit by Infant — Suit by Mother — Evidence. — "Manifestly no such mutual or successive relationship exists between the infant claiming damages for his pain and suffering, and his mother claiming damages for the loss of his services; the causes of action are distinct, and neither claimant could, under any circumstances, succeed to the other's cause of action. There is a case in 53 Ind. 143 (Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Stout) where this distinction seems to be overlooked." Metropolitan St. R. Co. v. Gumby (C. C. A.), 99 Fed. Rep. 192. Here it was accordingly held that the testi-

In Point of Time. — A privy must come after him to whom he is privy, and can never precede.¹

As to the Estate. — A privy in estate is a successor to the same estate, not to a different estate in the same property.²

Res Judicata. — Privies, whether in estate, in blood, or in law, are estopped from litigating that which is conclusive upon him with whom they are in privy.³

Time of Acquisition of Interest. — But within the rule that judgments are binding upon privies, as well as upon parties, only those are privies who acquire their interest in the subject matter of the suit, subsequent to the suit.⁴

Private. — The term "privy" is also used in the sense of private, as privy seal, privy verdict, etc.⁵

Knowledge — Secret Transaction. — It also means, sometimes, "admitted to the participation of knowledge with another of a secret transaction."⁶

PRIZE. — I. A prize is ordinarily some valuable thing, offered by a person for the doing of something by others, into the strife for which he does not enter.⁷ II. A purse, prize, or premium is properly something taken on the high sea from a common enemy against whom war is declared.⁸ III. In mony of the infant in the former action was inadmissible in the second action. See also Murphy v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 31 Hun (N. Y.) 358.

The Recital of One Deed in Another binds the parties and those who claim under them; technically speaking, it operates as an estoppel and binds parties and privies; privies in blood, privies in estate, and privies in law. Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 83. See also the title ESTOPPEL, vol. II, p. 385.

Privies in Estate and Privies by Contract Distinguished. — See Breckenridge v. Ormsby, 1 J. J. Marsh (Ky.) 250.

Limitation of Liability of Ship Owners — United States Statutes — "Without the Privy or Knowledge," etc. — See the titles SHIPS AND SHIPPING; CONTRACTS OF AFFREIGHTMENT AND CHARTER PARTIES, vol. 7, p. 156. In Quinlan v. Pew, 5 U. S. App. 416, the court, after giving various definitions of the term privy, in the ordinary sense, continues: "We therefore conclude that the word privy, as found in this statute, includes at least as much as the word 'knowledge;' but we, of course, do not overlook the fact that there is in law imputed knowledge, and therefore there may be imputed privy. Each of these arises where the owners give an order for the doing of a particular thing in a particular way, and assume that it is done, or do not inquire whether or not it is afterwards accomplished. Under such circumstances the word privy is even more pertinent than 'knowledge;' because, while the conduct of the owners would in law impute knowledge, they would also actively partake. Each is also imputed to those who refuse to see, or who are guilty of perverseness, or of such crass negligence as amounts to it."

Same — English Statutes. — In The Republic, 20 U. S. App. 561, the court said: "The statute was principally taken from the English statutes of 26 and 53 Geo. III. These statutes, instead of the words 'privy or knowledge,' used the words 'privy and knowledge,' or 'fault or privy,' to express the exception. In the later English statutes (the Merchants' Shipping Acts of 1854 and 1862), the phraseology was varied so that the exemption was limited to losses occurring without the 'actual fault or privy' of the shipowner. There is no reason to suppose that the diverse phraseology of these acts was employed for the purpose of expressing different rules of exemption, as there were no decisions of the English courts which indicated that the terms were not synonymous." marine insurance, a prize is a capture, any taking or seizing, even unlawfully, by force.¹

In Seventy-eight Bales Cotton, 1 Lowell (U. S.) 14, it is said: "But, it is said, in order that goods should be condemned, they must be captured from the enemy, and here was no capture. Sir William Scott is quoted as saying in The Two Friends, 1 C. Rob. 283: 'I know of no other definition of prize goods than that they are goods taken on the high seas, jure belli, out of the hands of the enemy.' It is sought to be inferred from this remark of an eminent judge, that there must have been a hostile possession at the time of the taking, which possession has been changed by the captors. But it is evident that no such meaning was intended, because in the great majority of all the condemnations pronounced by that learned judge, the property came from neutral or friendly possession. Nor can it be maintained that the application of force, actual or constructive, is necessary. In many cases that have passed into judgment the goods were driven within the jurisdiction by stress of weather, or of a hostile pursuit which had ceased, or had been detained by an embargo; and the taking has often been only by the marshal, on his warrant, after due proceedings had in the prize court itself."

Recapture. — The Schooner Adeline, 9 Cranch (U. S.) 284.

In Case of Joint Capture by the Army and Navy, it has been held that under a United States statute there is no right to prize money. The court said: "No provision is found in any of these statutes touching joint captures by the army and navy. They are wholly silent as to the military arm of the service. It results from this state of things, according to the principles we have laid down, that such captures enure exclusively to the benefit of the United States. In the English law they are held not to be within the prize acts, and are provided for by statutes passed specially for that purpose. In Genoa and Its Dependencies, 2 Dods. 446, Lord Stowell, speaking of the word prize, says: 'It evidently means maritime capture effected by maritime force only, — ships and cargoes taken by ships. * * * What was taken by a conjunct expedition was formerly erroneously considered as vested in a certain proportion of it, in the capturing ships under the prize acts; but in a great and important case lately decided, Hoogskarpeel, Lords of Appeal, 1785, it was determined that the whole was entirely out of the effect of those prize acts, and in so deciding, determined by direct and included consequence, that the words 'prizes taken by any of her majesty's ships or vessels of war,' cannot apply to any other cases than those in which the captures are made by ships only.' In Booty in The Peninsula, 1 Hag. 47, the same great authority, referring to 'a conjunct expedition,' held this language: 'It may be difficult, and perhaps perilous, to define it negatively and exclusively. It is more easy and safe to define it affirmatively, that that is a conjunct expedition which is directed by competent authority, combining together the actions of two different species of force, for the attainment of some common specific purpose.' The opinion of the court below proceeded upon the ground that the present case is one of this character. Whether it was or was not is the question presented for our determination. The application of Lord Stowell's test leaves no room for doubt as to its proper solution.' The Siren, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 395.

I. DEFINITION. — The term "prize-fight" has no technical legal meaning, but is used in its common signification,¹ to indicate a fight in a public place² for a prize or reward.³

II. NATURE AND ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE — 1. Nature of Offense — a. AT COMMON LAW. — While prize-fighting did not constitute a specific offense at common law, it was illegal, and the participants therein were guilty of a breach of the peace⁴ and were punishable for an affray,⁵ assault and battery, or riot, according to the circumstances.⁶

b. UNDER STATUTES. — In the majority if not all of the states, statutes have been enacted prohibiting prize-fighting and defining the offense.¹

2. Elements of Offense — a. NECESSITY OF PREVIOUS AGREEMENT. — It has been stated that to render a contest a prize-fight there must have been a previous agreement between the contestants that it should continue until one of them obtained the victory. The agreement need not have been entered into at any specific length of time before the contest, nor is it necessary that it should have been in writing. Where it is entered into by the seconds or other parties it is not binding on the principals unless it is shown that they knew of the terms before the contest was held.²

b. INTENT TO INJURE. — There must be an intent on the part of the contestants to do violence to and inflict some degree of bodily harm on each other.³ It is not necessary, however, that there should have been anger or mutual ill-will on the part of the principals.⁴ Nor is it necessary that they shall have agreed that the contest shall be continued until one of them is overcome or that it shall be fought "to a finish."⁵

c. PUBLICITY. — To constitute the offense of prize-fighting, it is essential that the fight should have been held in a public place or in a place to which the public or some part of it was admitted as spectators.⁶ The Ohio statute has been construed, however, to prohibit not only public prize-fighting but also all contests of that description, whether public or private.⁷

d. PRIZE OR REWARD. — To constitute a fight a prize-fight there must have been expectation of a prize or reward to be gained by the contest.⁸

Method in Which Prize Obtained Immaterial. — The prize may be money or other thing of value, and whether it takes the form of a wager between the contestants, or is contributed by others, or is the proceeds of the gate receipts, is immaterial.⁹

Leaving State to Engage in Fight. — Under Mass. Gen. Stat., c. 160, § 17 (Pub. Stat. c. 202, § 17), it is made an offense punishable by fine or imprisonment for an inhabitant or resident of the state to leave the state and engage in a fight with another person without the limits of the state, where these acts are done in pursuance of a previous engagement made within the state. Com. v. Barrett, 108 Mass. 302.

Statute Inoperative. — How. Stat. Mich., § 9306 (Comp. Laws, § 11732), in so far as it seeks to punish those who are parties to or engage in any other fight in the nature of a prize-fight, is inoperative, the elements constituting such a fight not being defined and there being no means by which the legislative intent can be ascertained. People v. Taylor, 96 Mich. 576.

Under the Massachusetts Statute of 1849, c. 149, a prize or reward is not essential to constitute a fight a prize-fight. Com. v. Welsh, 7 Gray (Mass.) 324.

9. What Constitutes the Prize Immaterial. — State v. Moore, 5 Ohio Dec. 689, 4 Ohio N. P. 81; People v. Taylor, 96 Mich. 576.

Indirect Reward. — Where the reward received is only an indirect one, as an increase of salary on account of the notoriety secured by engaging in the fight, the contest is not a prize-fight.¹

Division of Prize Immaterial. — It is not necessary that the prize should be gained by one contestant from the other, nor does the fact that a prize was awarded to the defeated as well as to the successful combatant necessarily prevent a conviction.²

Actual Award of Prize Not Essential. — It is sufficient that there was an agreement to contest for a prize, and it is not essential that the prize should have been actually awarded.³

e. METHOD IN WHICH FIGHT CONDUCTED IMMATERIAL. — No account is taken, in determining whether a contest is a prize-fight, as to whether it was fought with gloves or with bare fists,⁴ though the jury may take into consideration this fact, and, where gloves were used, may consider the kind, size, weight, and other characteristics of such gloves, in connection with the other evidence in the case.⁵

Nor Are the Technical Rules under which the contest was held material in determining whether or not it was a prize-fight.⁶

A Limitation upon the Number of Rounds to be fought does not render the contest any the less a prize-fight.⁷

3. Consent No Defense. — That the fight was had by consent or agreement between the principals does not prevent it from being illegal.⁸

III. AIDERS AND ABETTORS — 1. In General. — All persons aiding and abetting in a prize-fight are liable as principals.⁹

2. Liability of Spectators. — Under the earlier decisions it was held that persons who attended a prize-fight and were spectators thereat were guilty as principals.¹⁰ This did not, however, include those casually passing by and not remaining to witness the contest.¹¹ In a more recent decision it has been held that while the presence of a person at a fight, when unexplained, is some evidence for the consideration of the jury, mere voluntary presence does not as a matter of law necessarily render persons so present guilty, but that there must be some active step, either by word or deed, to instigate the principals, to render a spectator liable.¹²

IV. SPARRING OR BOXING MATCHES — 1. At Common Law. — A sparring or boxing match which was merely intended as an exhibition of skill was not illegal at common law, but when the principals met intending to fight till one was overcome by injury or exhaustion,¹ or where the contest was so long continued as to render it probable that injury would result,² it was an offense.

2. Under Statutes. — In some jurisdictions authority is granted by statute to athletic clubs to conduct sparring or boxing matches.³ The exhibitions so authorized must be strictly of that nature, and must not be held for a prize or reward⁴ or have any of the features of a prize-fight.⁵

V. REMEDIES IN CIVIL ACTIONS — 1. Injunction. — Although a prize-fight is a crime, it has been held that when the fight and its attendant circumstances will constitute a nuisance and cause an irreparable injury for which there is no remedy at law, an injunction will be granted to prevent it from being held.⁶ Such relief has also been granted where the holding of such a fight would be a misuse and abuse of the charter of the corporation conducting it.⁷

2. Damages. — An action by one of the contestants to recover damages for injuries received by reason of the fight is not barred by the fact that it was held by consent or agreement between them, as such agreement to break the peace is void, and the maxim volenti non fit injuria has no application.⁸ But the agreement may be shown in mitigation of damages.⁹

VI. EVIDENCE — 1. Declarations. — Declarations of either of the principals with reference to the prize-fight or in furtherance thereof, while engaged in its prosecution, are competent evidence against the other, though the agreement to fight was made through representatives of the principals, and the latter were unknown to each other.¹⁰

2. Prize-fight a Question of Fact. — The question whether or not a particular contest was a prize-fight is for the determination of the jury upon the evidence and under proper instructions from the court.¹¹

3. Expert Evidence. — Expert evidence as to whether or not a contest was a prize-fight is not admissible,¹² nor are the rules adopted by associations of persons for the management of such encounters.¹³

15. Probability. — A committee of viewers found that a tract of land would, "in all probability," continue to be held and used for railroad freight purposes. It was held that a mere probability was not sufficient to affect the case under consideration, and that if a degree of probability which amounted to a practical certainty was intended, the facts on which the conclusion was based should have been found, so that the court might see on what it rested. New York, etc., R. Co. v. New Britain, 49 Conn. 40.

Instructions. — In People v. O'Brien, 130 Cal. 1, it was said: “Probability is mere ‘likelihood’ or ‘appearance’ — i. e., resemblance — of truth” (Webster’s Dictionary); and in ordinary language the term implies doubt (Century Dictionary). To instruct the jury that they may ‘act on probabilities’ means simply that they may act on less than convincing evidence, or without that ‘moral certainty’ required by the law.” See also Howard v. State, 108 Ala. 571; and the title REASONABLE DOUBT.

Probability Distinguished from Proof. — “It seems to us that there is a difference between probability and proof. The object of both words is to express a particular effect of evidence, but ‘proof’ is the stronger expression. * * * Demonstration produces certain knowledge, proof produces belief, and probability, opinion.” McGowen, J., in Brown v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., 19 S. Car. 59, 13 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 487.

Probable means most consonant with reason; having the appearance of reality and truth. Gardner v. Gardner, (Pa. 1896) 35 Atl. Rep. 560.

Probable Consequence. — In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Elliott, 12 U. S. App. 387, it was said: “A probable consequence is one that is more likely to follow its supposed cause than it is to fail to follow it.”

Probable Expectation. (See also the titles

ASSIGNMENTS, vol. 2, p. 1026; CATCHING BARGAIN, vol. 5, p. 764; and see EXPECTANCY, vol. 12, p. 392.) — In Allen v. Flood, (1898) A. C. 16, Hawkins, J., said that what Lord Ellenborough, in Pitt v. Donovan, 1 M. & S. 639, termed a “probable expectation” (as distinguished from a vested legal interest) is “an essential element in promoting the success and contributing to the value of every occupation by which the means of living are obtained. The daily laborer whose tested character for steadiness, honesty, and industry has induced his master, as a matter of course, through a long series of years, week by week to renew or continue his employment finds in this the foundation for his ‘reasonable and probable expectation’ that he may rely on continual employment in the future. These ‘probable expectations’ are equally applicable to all trades, great and small. * * * It is analogous to the good will of a business sold to a new firm.”

Probable Grounds for Suspicion. — See State v. Grant, 76 Mo. 246.

2. Probable Cause — Information and Belief. — In State v. Boulter, 5 Wyo. 244, it was said: “Another consideration that should not be overlooked is that the information is verified by the prosecuting attorney on information and belief. And there is no finding or showing of probable cause to believe the defendant guilty of the degree of offense charged. The information verified on information and belief does not of itself constitute ‘probable cause supported by affidavit.’ See Const. Wyo., art. 1, § 4; U. S. v. Bollman, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 373, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,622; State v. Gleason, 32 Kan. 245.”

I. DEFINITIONS — 1. Probate. — The probate of a will is the proof before the proper court or officer that the instrument offered to be proved or recorded is the last will and testament of the deceased person whose testamentary act it is alleged to be.¹ This includes not only the evidence, jurisdictional and otherwise, presented to the court, but also the judicial determination by the court on that evidence that the instrument is what it purports to be.²

2. Letters of Administration and Letters Testamentary. — Letters of Administration are defined as an instrument in writing granted by the judge or officer having jurisdiction and power to grant such letters, thereby authorizing the person or persons to whom they are granted to administer the personal estate of the intestate.³

Letters Testamentary are defined as an instrument in writing granted by the

2. Probate Includes Both Evidence and Determination Thereon. — Vanderpoel v. VanValkenburgh, 6 N. Y. 190; Matter of Drayton, 4 McCord L. (S. Car.) 46. Thus, in Chase v. Stockett, 72 Md. 235, the executors of a will presented to the probate court an unattested paper signed by the testatrix after the execution of the will, and prayed that it might be filed and recorded with the affidavits thereto attached, showing its genuineness, "to have such effect as it may." Thereupon the court ordered "that the foregoing papers be filed by the register of wills and by him recorded in accordance with the prayer of the petitioners." It was held that this did not operate as a probate of the paper as a part of the will.

3. Letters of Administration Defined. — Bouvier's Law Dict., Letters of Administration. As to the jurisdiction to grant letters of administration, the persons entitled thereto, and the several kinds thereof, see the title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. 11, p. 759 et seq.

judge or proper officer having jurisdiction of the probate of wills, after the probate of the will, to an executor, authorizing him to act as such.¹

II. NATURE AND INCIDENTS OF PROBATE PROCEEDING — Not an Action. — A proceeding for the probate of a will is not an "action" in the sense in which that word is generally used,² and therefore it does not abate by the death of a party.³ Thus, no persons are parties to the proceeding until, by some affirmative act, they engage in the litigation; but the mere fact that persons interested in the estate have been served with notice of the application for probate is not sufficient to constitute them parties.⁴ In some respects, however, under statutes regulating the subject, it is in the nature of an ordinary action.⁵

Proceeding in Rem. — The proceeding is one in rem, the purpose of which is to ascertain the status of the estate of the decedent and the condition in which he died, that is, whether he died testate or intestate.⁶ This rule is not affected by the transfer of the cause, under the statute, to a court of law for the trial of the issue. The proceeding is still one in rem operating directly on the will.⁷

Nonsuit or Withdrawal of Application. — It has been held that the proponent of a will cannot suffer a nonsuit or withdraw the paper propounded as the decedent's will, because the proceeding in the court being in rem, the court must give its judgment on the res, which is the paper itself, without regard to particular persons.⁸ On the other hand, some authorities hold that where there is a contest, the proceeding is in the nature of one inter partes, and in some respects like ordinary suits, one of the incidents of which is the right to take a nonsuit or dismiss the proceeding.⁹ But any person may withdraw at will from a probate proceeding to which he is a party, even in those jurisdictions where the right of the proponent to take a nonsuit or dismiss the proceeding is denied. Such withdrawal, however, can affect the rights of no one except the person who seeks to withdraw. The paper propounded remains in the possession of the court and the proceeding for its probate is still pending.¹

Arbitration and Compromise. — It results as a consequence of the nature of a proceeding for the probate of a will as one in rem that the parties cannot submit the controversy to arbitration,² nor can a contestant compromise anything beyond his own personal interest in the contest.³

Proceeding Not Divisible. — A proceeding for the probate of a will is not a separable controversy. It must be single and complete in one hearing, whether it is in the probate court or in the appellate court;⁴ and on the same principle such a proceeding is not severable for the purpose of removal to a federal court.⁵

Probate a Judicial Act. — The courts of probate, as ordinarily constituted, exercise a judicial and not a ministerial power in respect to the probate of wills.⁶ Even in those jurisdictions where the clerk of the court in vacation is authorized to admit wills to probate subject to confirmation by the court, it is still a judicial power, since the action of the clerk is of no effect unless afterwards confirmed by the court.⁷

III. JURISDICTION — 1. Probate Jurisdiction Generally — a. BY WHAT COURTS EXERCISED — (1) In England. — Formerly the ecclesiastical courts were practically the only courts in England in which wills of personalty could be established or disputed. The exception to this was in the case of certain courts baron, which by immemorial usage had exercised jurisdiction in the probate of wills.⁸ By a statute passed in the year 1857, the Court of Probate was created, and all probate jurisdiction formerly exercised by other courts was transferred to it.⁹ Afterwards (in 1873) the Supreme Court of Judicature Act united and consolidated together as one Supreme Court of Judicature all existing courts of which the Court of Probate was one.¹⁰

(2) In United States — (a) State Courts and Officers. — In the United States, probate jurisdiction is vested by statute in local courts, of which there is generally one for each county. The courts are variously designated as courts of probate, surrogates' courts, orphans' court, etc., and in some states this jurisdiction is conferred on the county court, or some other local court having common-law powers.¹¹

Officers Authorized to Admit Wills to Probate. — In some states the statutes provide that the clerk of the court of probate or other designated officer may admit wills to probate during the vacation of the courts,¹ or when the judge thereof cannot act for any other reason,² but the action of such clerk or officer must be confirmed by the court.³

(b) Federal Courts. — It is a well-settled principle that the federal courts have no original probate jurisdiction,⁴ though they may entertain a suit between citizens of different states for the construction of a will,⁵ to set aside a will which has been admitted to probate.⁶ Logically, therefore, an original proceeding in a probate court for the probate of a will, or an appeal therefrom, would seem not to be removable to a federal court, and it has been held so in several cases,⁷ but the decisions on this question are conflicting.⁸

b. JURISDICTIONAL FACTS — (1) Death of Testator. — Before any court can take jurisdiction of an application for the probate of a will, it is essential that the paper propounded as a will should have become effective as such by the death of the testator. Therefore an order or decree admitting a paper to probate is absolutely void, if it afterwards appears that the testator was not, in fact, dead.⁹

Ante-mortem Probate Authorized by Statute. — By a comparatively recent statute in one of the states, it was provided that a testator might procure the probate of his will during his lifetime,¹⁰ but this statute was soon held to be inoperative as not within any recognized judicial power.¹¹

(2) Residence Within Jurisdiction of Court. — Where the testator was an inhabitant of the state at the time of his death, the probate court of the county in which he then had his residence has exclusive original jurisdiction in the matter of the probate of his will in that state,¹ and it is proper that the will should be first submitted to the forum of the domicil, but this is not absolutely necessary.² In order to give this exclusive jurisdiction, the testator must have been domiciled in the state,³ and he must have had a permanent and not a mere temporary residence in the county.⁴

Domicil of Married Woman. — The rule of the common law that a married woman cannot have a separate domicil from her husband⁵ is applicable in testamentary matters as well as in other respects, and where there has been no statutory modification of the rule, a married woman's will must be proved in the probate court of the county of her husband's residence, though, at the time of her death, she was living apart from her husband and in another jurisdiction.⁶ But modern legislation removing the disabilities of married women, and modifying the ancient doctrine of the unity of husband and wife, has done much to change the rule under consideration, and where there has been such legislation it has been held that a married woman, living apart from her husband, may acquire a domicil on her own account so as to give the courts thereof jurisdiction of the probate of her will.⁷

Determination as to Domicil. — When a will is presented for probate, the court has jurisdiction to decide the question of the residence of the testator, and the decision in that question is generally held to be conclusive on collateral attack.⁸ The admission of the will to probate is in effect a decision on the question of domicil.¹

In this respect there is a distinction between the probate of a decedent's will in the wrong county and the probate of a will of a person who is not, in fact, dead. If the testator is dead, jurisdiction exists in some court to admit the will to probate, and the court to which the will is presented must decide whether it or some other court has jurisdiction. If, on the other hand, the testator is not dead, there is no jurisdiction in any court to take proof of the will, and therefore the act of the court in assuming jurisdiction in such a case is absolutely void. See supra, this section, Death of

Proof of Domicil. — The evidence by which the domicil of a person may be proved has been treated elsewhere in this work.² According to the principles there stated, a recital in a will of the testator's domicil is evidence that such was his domicil at the time of his death, but it is not conclusive.³ And so, too, the payment of taxes on personal property is evidence of domicil at the place of payment.⁴

Burden of Proof. — The burden of proving the domicil of the testator is on the proponent.⁵

(3) Situs of Assets. — In case a testator leaves property in a state other than that in which he had his residence, it is generally necessary to prove the will and to obtain the letter testamentary in the state where such property is situated.⁶ The jurisdictional fact is the existence of assets within the state.⁷ Under such circumstances, the probate court of the county in which the property is situated has jurisdiction in the premises,⁸ and even the original probate may be had in that county⁹ though, as a general rule, a will should be proved in this first instance at the testator's domicil.¹⁰

Wills of Real Estate. — If real estate is disposed of by a foreign will, probate in the proper court of the locus rei sitæ is always necessary.¹¹

limited or restricted to a particular subject-matter, yet such courts are not, strictly speaking, of an inferior or limited jurisdiction, but, within their province, are courts of general jurisdiction.¹

Wills of Real Estate. — The jurisdiction of the probate courts as constituted in the United States is not limited to wills which dispose of personal property, but it extends also to wills of real estate.²

Construction of Will. — The general rule is that courts of probate are not courts of construction, therefore they are not authorized to determine the validity and effect of the provisions of a will, but only whether the paper offered for probate was duly executed and published by the testator as his last will and testament, and whether he had mental capacity and legal power to make a will,³ though it is sometimes provided by statute that the validity of a bequest may be put in issue in the probate court and may be determined by that court.⁴

IV. ancient document.¹ An unprobated will is, however, capable of conveying an interest in the property devised, so as to be the foundation of an equity in and a claim to the property.²

Probate After Commencement of Action. — A will is admissible in evidence in an action by a devisee under it, though probate was not had until the action had been commenced.³

When Probate May Be Dispensed With. — The probate of a will may be dispensed with where the persons interested in the estate under the will, being under no disability, divide the estate, pursuant to an agreement among themselves,⁴ or where the testator, before his death, conveyed to the devisees all the property which he had devised to them,⁵ or where the will makes no other disposition of the testator's property than had there been no will.⁶

Testator Cannot Waive Probate. — The testator cannot waive probate, because it is only by the probate that the character of the will as such is established.⁷

Probate Not a Matter of Discretion. — The court has no discretion but to admit to probate a will which appears to answer fully all the requirements of the statute.⁸

Necessity of Letters of Administration. — The necessity of letters of administration in case the decedent died intestate or left no executor competent and willing to act has been treated elsewhere in this work.⁹

V. WHAT PAPERS REQUIRE PROBATE — 1. Testamentary Papers in General. — Every Instrument of a Testamentary Character must, as a general rule, be admitted to probate in the proper court before it becomes effectual to support any rights under it.¹⁰ There was, at one time, a distinction in this respect between wills relating wholly to real estate and wills relating either in whole or in part to personalty, but the distinction is now obsolete.¹¹ In determining therefore whether probate is necessary in any case, it must be first determined whether the particular instrument possesses the testamentary character, that is, whether it is a will. This question will be considered in another part of this work.¹² But it may be stated here that, as a general rule, a paper which neither disposes of any property nor appoints an executor has no testamentary character so as to enable the court to grant probate of it.¹

Will Containing Invalid Provisions. — If a will has been properly executed by a competent testator, duly attested as required by law, and there has been no fraud or undue influence in its procurement, it is entitled to probate in its entirety though some of its provisions are invalid, obscure, or not capable of execution.² It has also been held that a duly executed will must be admitted to probate, even though it contains no provision which can be executed or which is valid under the law.³

In the Case of Successive Wills, only the one last executed may be admitted to probate, if the earlier will or wills have been revoked by the last one.⁴

A Will Made in the Execution of a Power must be proved in the same manner as an ordinary will.⁵

Property Transferred by Testator in Lifetime. — The fact that the testator had transferred all his property during his lifetime does not take away the right to prove his will, and it is immaterial whether the will was made before or after the transfer. In either case, the devisee or legatee may have the will proved to enable him to contest the transfer; and if a devisee is also the grantee, he may have the will proved to enable him to claim under it, in case the deed should be held to be invalid.⁶

Will of Deceased Sovereign. — In England it seems that no court has jurisdiction to grant probate of the will of a deceased sovereign.⁷

2. Distinction Between Real and Personal Estate — a. RULE IN ENGLAND. — Before the passage of the Court of Probate Act in 1857, the ecclesiastical court could not grant probate of a will unless it operated on personal estate, and therefore a will which affected real estate only and no personalty was not subject to probate.⁸ But in the case of a mixed will, that is, one affecting both realty and personalty, probate was required,⁹ though it had no effect so far as the realty was concerned.¹⁰

Effect of Court of Probate Act. — The Court of Probate Act, which created a court of probate and transferred to it all matters of probate jurisdiction, did not have the effect of requiring the probate of a will of real estate only,¹¹ though it provided that in a proceeding for probate in solemn form of a will which did not affect personal estate alone, the heir at law, devisees, and other persons having or claiming an interest in the real estate devised, should be cited, and that the decree of the court in the premises should be conclusive as to the validity or invalidity of the will, as the case might be.¹

Doctrine of Equitable Conversion. — The question has been raised, whether a will which effects an equitable conversion of realty into personalty is to be regarded, in respect to the property so converted, as a will of personal estate. This question was first presented while the Court of Probate Act was in force, and the court of probate refused to recognize the doctrine of equitable conversion as giving the jurisdiction over a will limited to real property. The ruling was seemingly based on the ground that such court, having only the jurisdiction formerly exercised by the ecclesiastical, manorial, and peculiar courts, was not the proper tribunal to determine whether or not there was an equitable conversion.² The question arose again after the court of probate and other courts had been consolidated into one by the Judicature Act, and it was held by the probate division that there is no difference in the law to be administered in that division and in the other divisions of the high court of justice, but that each is to ascertain what the law is, whether legal or equitable principles are involved. In consequence of this changed condition, it was held by the probate division that a will which converted real estate into personalty would be treated as a will of personalty and that it should therefore be admitted to probate as such.³

Present Rule in England. — The rule respecting the probate of wills of realty, as stated above, has been radically changed by recent legislation in England. By the Conveyancing Act of 1881 it is provided that real estate vested on any trust, or by way of mortgage, in any person solely, shall, on his death, devolve on and become vested in his personal representative,⁴ and the Land Transfer Act of 1897 contains the same provision in regard to real estate to which a decedent was entitled in fee simple for his own benefit;⁵ and in order that their estates may vest in the executor, the will by which the executor is appointed must be admitted to probate.⁶

b. RULE IN UNITED STATES. — The distinction between wills of real estate and wills of personalty in regard to the necessity of probate is now practically obsolete in the United States, and under the existing probate laws of the several states, all wills must now be proved in the probate court, regardless of the property affected.⁷

3. Paper Appointing Executor. — The authorities hold that the bare nomination of an executor without appointing anything to be done by him or giving any legacy is sufficient to make the instrument a will, and that as a will it must be proved,⁸ even though the executor renounces the executorship.⁹

Will Limited to Real Estate. — It has already been seen that formerly a will limited to real estate was not within the jurisdiction of the probate court.¹ In case such a will also contained the appointment of an executor, there was a question as to whether it was still to be regarded as a will of real estate only, and therefore not entitled to probate, or whether the appointment of the executor was sufficient to bring it within the probate jurisdiction. Under such circumstances it would seem, on principle, that the instrument would have been entitled to probate, if the testator left any personalty, because the title to such personalty would vest in the executor;² and some authorities lay down the rule without qualification that a will which appoints an executor is entitled to probate though it deals only with real estate.³

4. Paper Appointing Guardian. — It has been held in England that a paper which does not purport to dispose of any property and contains no appointment of an executor, but merely appoints a guardian of a minor, is not entitled to probate,⁴ but in the United States it seems that probate of such a will is necessary.⁵

5. Will Contained in Several Papers. — It is not essential that a will should consist of a single paper, and in practice it often occurs that a testator leaves several papers constituting his will.⁶ When this condition exists, all the papers constituting the will must be included in the probate, regardless of their form, provided they are duly executed. Thus, in many cases, separate papers, each in testamentary form, have been admitted as a will.⁷ So, too, a paper not executed as a will may, by a proper reference in a duly attested strument nominating an executor could not be affected by anything occurring after the decedent's death, and therefore renunciation by the executor could not have the effect of making the decedent intestate.

Revoked Will Not Included in Probate. — A will which is revoked by a later will is not to be included in the probate of the later will,

will, be made a part thereof, in which case both papers must be included in the probate,¹ though it has been held that it is not necessary to include such extraneous paper in the probate.² And several papers, none of which were in testamentary form, have been admitted to probate as a will.³

The Principle here involved is that the several papers taken together constitute the will of the decedent and that the probate should contain the whole and not a part only of the decedent's will.⁴

VI. WHO MAY PROPOUND WILL FOR PROBATE — 1. Rule in England. — The rule laid down by the English authorities is that only he who is named as the executor may prove the will.⁵ If he renounces the executorship, which he may do as matter of right,⁶ or if he dies before the testator, or if the will either fails to name an executor at all or names a person who is incompetent to act, the application is not for probate, but for letters of administration with the will annexed,⁷ but in such case the will must still be proved, as though probate of it were taken by an executor.⁸

2. Rule in United States. — While the executor named in a will is always the proper person to propound it for probate,⁹ and he is, in some jurisdictions, subject to penalties if he neglects to act,¹⁰ it is generally provided by the probate laws of the several states that any devisee or legatee named in a will, or any person interested in the estate of the testator, may have the will proved before the proper probate court.¹¹ Under such statutes, if a person other than the executor propounds the will for probate, he must show that whether the revocation is express or results from inconsistency of the two instruments. In Goods of Stephens, 18 W. R. 528, 22 L. T. N. S. 727; In Goods of Palmer, 58 L. J. P. 44; Pepper v. Pepper, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 85; Shiel v. O'Brien, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 64; In Goods of Macfarlane, 13 L. R. Ir. 264; McAra v. McCay, 23 L. R. Ir. 138. And the fact that the revoked will had been made pursuant to a contract between the testator and the beneficiary will not entitle it to probate. The only remedy of the beneficiaries under the first will is in equity, the surrogate's court having no jurisdiction to deal with any matter of contract. In re Gloucester, (Surrogate Ct.) 11 N. Y. Supp. 899.

The proposition that the probate must contain the whole and not a part only of the will does not mean that all or none of several consistent testamentary papers must be admitted to probate. It means merely that so much of such papers as may be found by the court to compose the will shall be probated. See infra, this title, Partial or Limited Probate.

he has an interest in the matter, and of this the fact that he is named as a legatee in the will is sufficient evidence.¹

Custodian of Will. — It is sometimes provided by statute that a will shall be propounded by the person who has been intrusted with its custody, though it may be presented by any person interested under it who may acquire possession.²

A Creditor of the testator or of a legatee is interested in the estate, and as such may prove the will.³

VII. TIME FOR PROBATE — 1. During Lifetime of Testator. — While the testator is living, the probate court may not proceed to the probate of the will, because it is subject to revocation or alteration by the testator as long as he lives; and it has even been held that a statute providing for the probate of a will during the life of the testator is ineffectual.⁴ But provision may properly be made for one or more safe and convenient depositories, under the direction and control of the court of probate, for all such wills of living persons as shall be deposited therein for safe custody.⁵

2. After Death of Testator — a. HOW SOON AFTER DEATH WILL MAY BE PROVED. — There is no requirement that any particular period after a testator's death shall elapse before the will may be proved,⁶ in the absence of a statute or rule of practice on the subject.⁷

b. DELAY IN PROOF OF WILL — (i) Rule at Common Law. — At common law, the right to prove a will is not barred by the lapse of any time, however great,⁸ though the failure of the executor to make a timely application may operate as an implied renunciation of the executorship so as to authorize a Unincorporated Association as Legatee. — Some of the members of an unincorporated association, to which a legacy has been bequeathed, may, on behalf of all, proceed to establish the will. This results from the principle that, though the proceeding is technically one at law, yet it is to a certain extent of an equitable nature. Lilly v. Tobbein, 103 Mo. 477, 23 Am. 6. How Soon After Death Will May Be Proved. — Since the death of the testator is the fact which brings the matter within the jurisdiction of the proper court, there would seem to be no reason why the court should not proceed as soon as the fact occurs. See the title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. II, pp. 783, 784.

7. In England it is provided by the general rules and orders for the registrars of the principal registry that "no probate * * * shall issue until the lapse of seven days from the death of the deceased unless under the direction of the judge or by order of two of the registrars." Rule 43, P. R. 1862.

By statute in New Jersey no will shall be proved until ten days from the death of the testator. Matter of Evans, 29 N. J. Eq. 571. Compare the statutes in other jurisdictions.

8. Time of Probate Not Limited at Common Law. — Vance v. Crawford, 4 Ga. 446; Rebhan v. Mueller, 114 Ill. 343, 55 Am. Rep. 869; Wells's Will, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 274; *Shumway v. grant of administration with the will annexed.¹ Therefore, though a paper has been admitted to probate as the last will of the decedent, or administration has been granted on the supposition that the decedent was intestate, a later will discovered at any time thereafter may, nevertheless, be proved.²

(2) Statutory Provisions — (a) In General. — The time for presenting a will for probate is now the subject of statutory regulation in many jurisdictions. A common instance of this is to be found in the statutes which require the executor or other person having custody of a will to deliver it to the court of probate within a limited time after the testator's death, and impose a penalty or forfeit of the executorship or other rights under the will in case of noncompliance with the statutory requirements. These, however, are not statutes of limitation.³ It is also sometimes provided that the courts to which the application is made shall receive the proof of the will without delay, that is, without unreasonable delay.⁴

(b) Statutes of Limitation. — In some states there is an absolute limitation of the time within which an application may be made for the probate of a will in any case, with a saving clause, however, in favor of persons under disabilities, or where the existence of the will has been concealed.⁵ In other states it is only an application for the probate of a later will or codicil discovered after the probate of a will of earlier date that is subject to limitation, and this is effected by a provision that a will which has been admitted to probate shall

3. Statutes to Prevent Delay in Application for Probate. — See, for example, Gen. Stat. Conn. 1888, § 547, which provides that all executors having knowledge of their appointment shall, within thirty days next after the death of the testator, exhibit the will for probate to the proper court or present it and declare their refusal to accept the executorship; and that every executor neglecting to do this shall forfeit seventeen dollars for each month from the expiration of the said thirty days until he shall exhibit said will to said court.

Forfeiture of Legacy or Devise. — The Michigan statute provides that if a legatee, having knowledge of the will, fails to secure its probate within a reasonable time after he knows of the testator's death, he will thereby bar himself from making claim thereunder; and fourteen years has been held an unreasonable time under this statute. Foote v. Foote, 61 Mich. 181.

Under the New York statute a devise does not affect the title of a bona fide purchaser from the testator's heirs, unless the will is admitted to probate or is duly established in an action brought for that purpose, within four years after the testator's death. Fox v. Fee, 167 N. Y. 44, affirming 33 N. Y. App. Div. 627.

And see generally the statutes of the various states on this subject.

Not a Statute of Limitation. — The Ohio statute providing that an estate devised shall not pass to the devisee but shall descend to the heirs of the testator, if the devisee fails to have the will probated within three years, merely forfeits an interest under the will, but does not preclude its probate at any subsequent time. The instrument still remains the will of the decedent, but the devisee loses his interest in it. Matter of Blymeyer, Ohio Prob. 14. See also Carpenter v. Denoon, 29 Ohio St. 379, holding that this statute refers only to the original probate and not to the admission of record of an authenticated copy of a probated will.

VIII. PROOF OF WILL — 1. Death of Testator. — In a proceeding for the probate of a will, the first fact to be proved is the death of the testator, and this is essential to the jurisdiction of the court.² This is ordinarily so notorious a fact that no difficulty attends the proof of it. In some cases, however, direct evidence is not obtainable, and resort must then be had to circumstantial evidence or to the presumption which arises from certain facts,³ but it must still be proved as a fact, and it is not sufficient to show that the testator is reputed to be dead.⁴

2. Due Execution of Will — a. RULE STATED. — The proponent in a probate proceeding must prove that the paper offered as a will was duly executed by the testator with all the formalities required by law, that is, it must be shown that the testator signed the will or acknowledged the signature as his in the presence of the prescribed number of witnesses and declared the instrument to be his will,⁵ that the witnesses subscribed their names as such in the presence of the testator and at his request,⁶ and that the testator knew the contents of the instrument.⁷

be made by the testimony of the attesting witnesses, if they are living and within the jurisdiction of the court.¹

(b) Number of Witnesses. — The authorities are not agreed as to whether a will may be proved by one only of the attesting witnesses or whether all must be called. In some states it is held that the statutes requiring the attestation of wills by two or more witnesses according to certain prescribed formalities do not imply that all of such witnesses shall be called to testify on the probate of the will, but that the fact of a due attestation may be proved, on common-law principles, by one credible witness,² though in a contested case the contestant may insist that all the attesting witnesses who are within reach of the process of the court shall be examined.³ It has been held, however, that even though the statute does not require the testimony of all the attesting witnesses, yet on appeal from an order admitting the will to probate, the failure of the proponent to produce a witness who was within the jurisdiction and could reasonably have been produced, is a suspicious circumstance.⁴ In other states the courts, following the rule which obtained in the ecclesiastical courts of England, hold that the full number of witnesses required by law to attest a will (generally two) must be produced, if they are living and within the jurisdiction of the court.⁵ But if the probate is uncontested, it seems

Each Witness Must Separately Depose to All the Facts necessary to be shown, and where the evidence of one or both of the witnesses is circumstantial, each must make out proof complete in itself. Circumstantial proof cannot be made by two or more witnesses alternating with each other as to the different parts of the that one witness is considered sufficient,¹ and in some jurisdictions the statutes expressly provide that in such cases the proof may be made by one attesting witness.²

Establishment of Will in Equity. — In a suit to establish a will, the rule of the court of equity in England is to require the production of all the attesting witnesses who are living and within the jurisdiction of the court.³

Death or Absence of Witnesses. — The rule that a will must be proved by all the attesting witnesses is of necessity dispensed with when the production of all of them is impossible by reason of death or absence. In such cases the execution of the will may be proved by a single witness, if one only can be produced, and proof of due attestation by the requisite number may be made by proving the handwriting of the other or others,⁴ unless the witness was incompetent at the time of the attestation.⁵ And if all the attesting witnesses

Mere Temporary Absence Not Ground for Proving Handwriting. — Stow v. Stow, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 305.

Depositions of Absent Witnesses. — If provision is made by statute for taking the depositions of witnesses out of the state, this does not prevent proof of the handwriting of an absent attesting witness to a will. It may be and often is impossible to compel a witness in another state to testify in a deposition. McKeen v. Frost, 46 Me. 239. See also Matter of Clark, 75 Hun (N. Y.) 471; Denny v. Pinney, 60 Vt. 524.

The New York statute provides, on this subject, a will may be established on proof of the handwriting of the testator and of the attesting witnesses, if an attesting witness "is absent from the state * * * and his testimony cannot, with due diligence, be obtained by a commission." Matter of Dates, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 608, 12 N. Y. Supp. 205.

Even if the proponent had taken the deposition of an absent witness and such deposition is on file, it is still sufficient under the Iowa statute to prove his handwriting. Matter of Allison, 104 Iowa 130.

are dead, the will may be established by proof of their handwriting and the handwriting of the testator, and also of such other circumstances as would be sufficient to prove the will on the trial of an action.¹

Failure of Witness to Remember Circumstances. — The due execution of a will may be proved by the testimony of one of the attesting witnesses, not only when the other or others are dead or absent, but also when he or they have forgotten the transaction.²

(2) Proof by Extrinsic Evidence — (a) In General. — Though the law regards the testimony of the attesting witnesses as the best evidence, yet it is not the only evidence by which a will may be established, because the probate of a will executed in accordance with all the requirements of the law is not dependent on either the lives of the witnesses or their recollection of the facts, or even on their veracity,³ and under such circumstances any evidence which is relevant and tends to prove the legal execution of the instrument is admissible.⁴ Accordingly, the fact of legal attestation and the other facts may be proved without the testimony of attesting witnesses, in case they are dead or absent⁵ or have no recollection of the matter.⁶

Dec. 179. As to who may be attesting witnesses in general, see the title WILLS.

If a Witness Was Competent at the Time of Attestation, but afterwards became incompetent, the attestation is nevertheless good on proof of the handwriting of the witness. In re Sullivan, 114 Mich. 189. Evidence Held Irrelevant. — Snider v. Burks, 84 Ala. 53; Robinson v. Stuart, 73 Tex. 267.

Evidence as to the number and circumstances of next of kin is irrelevant where only the validity of the execution of the alleged will is in question. Seguine v. Seguine, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 385.

Character in Evidence. — The character of the proponent is not admissible on the question of the genuineness of the instrument. Outlaw v. Hurdle, 1 Jones L. (46 N. Car.) 150. But the good character of a deceased subscribing witness is admissible to sustain the will. Black v. Ellis, 3 Hill L. (S. Car.) 68.

5. Inability to Produce Attesting Witnesses. — Rogers v. Diamond, 13 Ark. 474; Patten v. Tallman, 27 Me. 17. It is not necessary to show by the attesting witnesses that, at the time they signed, they knew that they were witnessing the testator's will. This fact, though necessary, may be shown by other witnesses or it may be inferred from the circumstances. In re Claflin, 73 Vt. 129. See also supra, this division of this section, Evidence — Number of Witnesses, paragraph Death or Absence of Witnesses.

Discretion of Probate Court. — It has been held that it is discretionary with the court to permit the proponent to introduce extrinsic evidence when the attesting witnesses have failed to make out a prima facie case in favor of the will. In re Ludlow, 6 Ohio Dec. 106, 4 Ohio N. P. 99.

Contradicting Attesting Witnesses. — A will may be admitted to probate even in opposition to the testimony of the attesting witness, and therefore if they all testify that the will was not duly executed the proponent may go into other evidence to prove its due execution.¹ So, too, if the testimony of the attesting witnesses is conflicting as to the legal execution of the will, it may be supported and established by other evidence.² In all such cases, however, the evidence in favor of the will must be clear and full to substantiate it.³

(b) Declarations and Admissions — aa. OF TESTATOR. — The declarations of a testator made at the time of the execution of a will are admissible in evidence as a part of the res gestæ, according to the general principles governing evidence of that character.⁴ But no subsequent statements are admissible to show the absence of any element requisite to a valid execution of a will, or that the instrument was not, in fact, the act of the testator,⁵ because they are neither a part of the *res gestæ*⁶ nor can they be considered as made in derogation of the title of the testator or otherwise against his interest.⁷ While the weight of authority is as indicated above, there are some cases which hold that such declarations are admissible,⁸ at least to corroborate other testimony to the same effect.⁹

In Scott v. Hawk, 105 Iowa 467, it was held that where the attesting witnesses were dead it was competent to show that the testator, on examination of the instrument and the signatures thereto, declared it his will, and that such statement was convincing evidence that he had executed the instrument as his will.

bb. OF THIRD PERSONS.—It is obvious that the declarations of a devisee, legatee, or other person interested in the probate of a will, are not admissible in evidence to prove the due execution of the will.¹ Neither are the declarations of the contestant admissible against the will,² or to dispense with proof of its due execution.³ Whether the declarations and admissions of a devisee or legatee are admissible to impeach the will is a question as to which there is a difference of opinion. The weight of authority seems to be against their admissibility,⁴ at least in a case where there are other devisees or legatees who are not parties to the probate proceeding, or who, being parties, do not consent to the reception of such evidence.⁵ It has been held, however, that the admissions of a legatee or devisee may be received in evidence like any other admissions against interest, even though there are other legatees and devisees, but as to such others it is merely a circumstance to be considered.⁶

Declarations of Executor or Administrator.—A will is not to be impeached or established by proof of the declarations of the executor,⁷ or administrator.⁸

Declarations of Attesting Witness.—The declarations of a deceased attesting witness are not admissible to prove his signature,⁹ though it has been held that after probate of the will such declarations may be received in derogation of the affidavit of the witness filed in the court of probate.¹⁰

(3) Presumption of Regularity.—When a will appears to have been duly executed and the attestation is established by proof of the handwriting of the witnesses or otherwise, but their testimony is not obtainable, or they do not remember the transaction, it will be presumed, in the absence of other evidence, that the will was executed in compliance with all the requirements of law.¹¹ Thus, it may be shown that the scrivener who drew the will and superintended its execution was experienced in drawing wills and familiar with the law thereof, since it may be inferred from the fact that the testator signed the will or acknowledged his signature in the presence of the attesting witnesses.¹ And on the same principle an attesting witness who does not remember the particulars of the transaction may testify as to his usual practice or course of business in such cases.²

Presumption of Fact. — This presumption is not one of law, but is a presumption of fact,³ and therefore, in contested cases, the regularity of the proceedings is open for general testimony.⁴

sufficient.¹ The burden of proof may, however, be increased by circumstances, as that the attesting witnesses are near relatives of the proponent, who is also a beneficiary under the will.²

IX. OPERATION AND EFFECT OF DECREE OR ORDER — 1. Admission to Probate — a. CONCLUSIVENESS OF PROBATE — (1) Collateral Attack. — The admission of a will to probate, in a case where the court had jurisdiction, is a sentence or decree of a judicial officer,⁴ and therefore, like any other judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, it cannot be collaterally impeached for any error or irregularity, but is conclusive until reversed or set aside according to law.⁵ This is the rule when the probate is in common form as well as when it is in solemn form.¹

(2) Direct Attack. — The statutes regulating the practice in probate matters generally provide for an appeal from a decree or order admitting a will to probate,² and in some jurisdictions a suit, usually in chancery, to contest a will may be brought within a certain time after its admission to probate, if there was no contest in the probate court.³ If no contest is instituted within the time specified, the probate becomes absolutely conclusive, and cannot afterwards be questioned in any proceeding,⁴ even though a later will is discovered.⁵

b. DISTINCTION BETWEEN REAL AND PERSONAL PROPERTY. — At Common Law, probate operated to establish the will so far only as it related to personal property, and was wholly without effect as to any real estate that might have been devised by the will, because the probate jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts did not extend to wills of real estate.⁶ Since the creation of the court of probate in England and its subsequent incorporation into the higher court of justice, wills of real and personal estate are alike subject to probate.⁷

In the United States, by virtue of the statutes regulating the subject, there is generally no distinction as regards the effect of probate between wills of personalty and wills of real estate,⁸ except so far as the will disposes of realty in a state other than that in which the probate was had, the reason of which

c. MATTERS ADJUDICATED BY PROBATE. — The admission of a will to probate operates as an adjudication that it was duly executed and attested as a will,⁴ and was not forged,⁵ or procured by fraud;⁶ that the testator had sufficient mental capacity to make a will,⁷ was of testamentary age,⁸ and had authority to dispose of property by will;⁹ that the attesting witnesses were

8. Testamentary Age. — Bent's Appeal, 35 Conn. 525; Ex p. Williams, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 529. The probate of the will of a person over eighteen years of age but under twenty-one, disposing only of personality, but directing that land should not be sold for the payment of the legacies, is conclusive of the factum and validity of the will as one of personality only. Thus, while at common law a married woman had no power to dispose of her person-competent and credible,¹ and that the evidence on which the probate was granted was sufficient to sustain the decree.² The probate of a will also involves an adjudication that the testator was a resident of the county in which the proceeding was had,³ and that the will was not revoked by marriage.⁴

Situs of Principal Part of Estate. — Under the Pennsylvania statute, providing that a will must be proved in the county where the principal part of the estate is found, the probate constitutes an adjudication of this fact.⁵

Force and Effect of Will. — Since courts of probate are not courts of construction,⁶ the validity and effect of the provisions of a will are not determined by its admission to probate, but are open to litigation in other proceedings.⁷

Want of Jurisdiction. — If the court was without jurisdiction in the premises, the decree of probate is not merely erroneous, but is absolutely void, and this objection may be made in any proceeding in which the probate may be relied on. Thus, the probate may be attacked collaterally on the ground that the testator was still alive,⁸ or that the will was not attested by the requisite number of witnesses,⁹ or that the record of the proceeding shows a want of compliance with the statutory requirements which are made essential to the jurisdiction of the court in the particular case, such as the publication of notice.¹⁰ In Georgia a probate in solemn form, being conclusive only on the parties notified and the legatees who are represented in the executor, is subject to collateral attack at the instance of an heir who had no notice of the proceeding;¹¹ and alty by will unless by her husband's consent or by virtue of a marriage settlement, the probate of the will of a married woman operated as an adjudication that she had such authority. Picquet v. Swan, 4 Mason (U. S.) 443; Cassels v. Vernon, 5 Mason (U. S.) 332; Judson v. Lake, 3 Day (Conn.) 318; Osgood v. Breed, 12 Mass. 525; Parker v. Parker, 11 *Cush. in New York, when probate is contested, notice must be given to all persons who would take any interest in any property under the will.¹

d. EFFECT OF PROBATE AS TO VESTING OF RIGHTS. — The title and rights of the executor and devisees are created by the will and not by the probate,² which is merely evidence of such title and rights,³ and in this respect the probate relates back to the death of the testator.⁴ But the probate is the only evidence, as a general rule, by which rights under the will may be established.⁵

2. Refusal of Probate. — Ordinarily, a will which has been refused probate on the merits cannot be again propounded for probate as long as the sentence of rejection remains in force,⁶ because that would be a collateral attack on the former proceeding.⁷ But persons who had no notice of the proceeding, and who would have been entitled to apply for probate in the first instance, may propound the will, notwithstanding its rejection.⁸

Void Sentence. — If the sentence of the probate court is void, it is, of course, subject to collateral attack, and therefore the will may again be offered for probate.⁹

Rejection Not on Merits. — If probate was refused, not on the merits, but merely because of the insufficiency of some matter of form or procedure, there is no adjudication that the instrument is not entitled to probate, and therefore it may be again propounded.¹⁰

Fraud or Collusion. — Another instance in which the refusal of probate does not bar a second application is where the decision was fraudulently and collusively obtained.¹¹

X. REVOCATION OF PROBATE — 1. By Application to Probate Court — a. POWER OF PROBATE COURT. — There is no question as to the power of a court of probate, in a proper case, to revoke the probate of a will. It was exercised by the ecclesiastical courts in England,¹² and it is generally recog-

Exclusive Power of Probate Court. — The power of the probate court to revoke the probate of a will is exclusive in the absence of a statute conferring it on other courts.³

Construction of Will. — The probate court has no power to construe the will in a proceeding to revoke the probate thereof.⁴

b. GROUNDS OF REVOCATION. — Probate may be revoked on the ground that the court acted without jurisdiction,⁵ that the probate was procured by fraud or was the result of mistake,⁶ that some statutory requirement, such as the giving of notice, was not complied with,⁷ or that a later will superseding the will proved has been discovered.⁸ Probate may also be revoked on the ground of newly discovered evidence.⁹

Consent of Parties. — The probate of a will may be revoked on the consent of the parties in interest.¹⁰

Statutory Provisions. — In some states the statutes enumerate in terms more or less comprehensive the grounds on which probate may be revoked.¹¹

c. TIME OF APPLICATION. — It is held that a void order of probate may, in the absence of any statute on the subject, be revoked at any time,¹² but

In South Carolina an ordinary may revoke the probate of a will allowed by his predecessor. Brown v. Gibson, 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 326. But it is otherwise in New Mexico. Bent v. Thompson, 138 U. S. 114, affirming 5 N. Mex. 408.

In Michigan the court of probate has no power to revoke the probate of a will, because that court derives its jurisdiction exclusively from the statute, and the statute does not confer any such authority. Grady v. Hughes, 64 Mich. 545; Wright v. Wright, 79 Mich. 527.

A Register of Wills in Pennsylvania cannot revoke an order of probate made by him. Such power is vested in the Orphans' Court. Beatty's Estate, 193 Pa. St. 304.

the matter is now generally regulated by statute, which requires the application to be made within a certain time after the probate or after the discovery of the facts on which the application is made.¹

d. WHO MAY OBTAIN REVOCATION. — Probate may be revoked only at the instance of a person interested in the estate,² or the personal representatives, heirs, devisees, or legatees of such person.³

2. By Appeal from Probate Court. — A decree or order admitting a will to probate, if erroneous, may be reversed and vacated on appeal. This is a purely statutory remedy, but it is provided for by the probate laws of nearly all the states.⁴

3. By Suit in Equity or Action at Law — a. SUIT IN EQUITY. — A court of equity has no jurisdiction, unless it is conferred by statute, to entertain a bill to set aside the probate of a will even on the ground of fraud, mistake, or forgery. This is an exception to the general rule that under such circumstances equity has concurrent jurisdiction with the other courts, and though no sufficient reason therefor can be assigned the rule is well established.⁵ It has been said, however, that there is not an absolute want of jurisdiction in equity, but that such courts may interfere when there is not an adequate remedy at law.¹

Statutory Jurisdiction in Equity. — In some states it is provided by statute that a suit in equity to contest a will may be brought² within a specified time after the probate thereof,³ but with a saving clause in favor of persons who are absent or under disability.⁴ The provision as to the time within which the suit may be brought is held to be not a mere matter of limitation, but a restriction on the power of the court, and therefore it cannot be waived.⁵

b. ACTION AT LAW. — In several states there are statutes which provide that an action at law or in the nature of an action at law may be brought to contest a will which has been admitted to probate,⁶ but in such actions equitable principles are applied by the court.⁷

XI. PARTIAL OR LIMITED PROBATE — 1. Power to Grant Partial or Limited Probate. — It is very clear that an instrument may possess all the requisites of a valid will as to some of its provisions, while other portions of it may not be the testamentary act of the testator, or may for some reason be ineffectual as to a part of the property. Therefore, since it is the province of the court in

Arkansas. — In this state the statute provides for an appeal from the probate court to the circuit court and thence to the supreme court, and makes the final decision thereon a bar to any other proceeding to call the probate of the will in question, except that it may be impeached in chancery on any ground that would give the court of chancery jurisdiction over any other judgment at law. *Sand. & H. a probate proceeding to determine whether or not the instrument propounded is the will of the alleged testator, it is obvious on principle and well settled by authority that the court may find that a part only of the instrument is the testator's will, or that it is operative as to a part only of the property which it assumes to dispose of, and may admit it to probate as to such part and reject the balance, or may limit the probate as to such property as the will is effectual to pass.¹

Nature and Extent of Power. — It has been held that this power is of a purely negative character, that is, the court may refuse probate to a part of the will, but cannot insert anything in the will.² Neither has the court the right to exclude any part of the will from probate on any ground which involves the construction of the will or the ascertainment of the testamentary intent.³ Thus, in the case of a will sufficiently comprehensive in terms to dispose of the testator's entire estate, the court cannot limit the probate to a particular part of such estate, though the testator may have believed that such part was all that he had the right to dispose of.⁴

2. Grounds for Exercise of Power. — According to the rule stated above, the court, in admitting a will to probate, may reject any provision which was procured by undue influence,⁵ or was inserted by fraud or mistake, or without the testator's instructions and without his knowledge,⁶ or which was a forgery.⁷

Will Not Effectual as to Part of Testator's Property. — A will may be sufficient as to some but not all of the property which it assumes to pass. This condition occurs in the case of a will which is void as to devises of realty, but good as to legacies of personalty. In such case probate will be limited to the property as to which the will is sufficient.⁸

Want of Testamentary Power. — Where a testator had the power to dispose, by will, of only part of his property, or only such part as is of a particular kind or character, but the will in terms undertakes to dispose of all the testator's property, it may be admitted to probate, limited, however, to such property as the testator had the power to dispose of.⁹

Married Women. — In Heath v. Withington, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 497, it was held that the probate of a will of a married woman, who had a power of appointment as to a part of her property, would be limited according to her power. See also Temple v. Walker, 3 Phill. Ecc. 400.

Infants. — Thus, where an infant who had both real and personal estate, and was of sufficient age to bequeath personalty, makes a will giving all his "property of every description whatsoever," it was admitted to probate as a will of personal property only. Deane v. Littlefield, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 239.

Want of Mental Capacity.— If a testator was incompetent at the time of the execution of one part of his will, but was competent when the other part was executed, probate of the part executed while the testator was incompetent will be refused.¹

Defamatory Matter in Will.— Where a will contains defamatory statements not connected with the disposing provisions, such statements may be expunged in the probate proceeding,² or at least omitted from the record or probate copy.³ There is no doubt as to the power of the court in this respect, but the power, it is said, is one that should be exercised with great moderation and only in cases of a definite character.⁴

XII FOREIGN WILLS— 1. Necessity of Probate— a. WILLS OF PERSONALTY.— When a testator leaves personalty in one or more states or countries other than that of which he was a resident at the time of his death, it is the usual practice to prove the will and obtain letters testamentary or letters of administration with the will annexed in each state or country where such assets may be found. This practice, however, is not regarded as necessary in every case,⁵ unless made so by statute.⁶

Probate as Affecting Right to Sue.— The rule that an executor or administrator cannot maintain any action or suit beyond the territorial limits of the state or country in which he was appointed, except under the authority of local statutes, has been considered elsewhere in this work.⁷

b. WILLS OF REAL ESTATE.— Since the validity of a will of real estate is governed by the lex loci rei sitæ, such a will must be admitted to probate or recorded in the state where the realty is situated,⁸ unless the necessity of

5. Caution in Exercise of Power.— In Goods of Honywood, L. R. 2 P. & D. 251, the matter objected to was as follows: "Lastly, it is my most sacred wish that the brief 'Honywood v. Honywood,' 1859, should be kept in the family, and handed down to all ages as a witness of the terrible iniquity which has robbed me of my birthright and blotted out the Essex branch of Honywood forever, and by which F. E. H. did most deliberately and designedly defraud me and my heirs of our patrimony and inheritance forever. I hereby record my most solemn conviction that my poor brother, the late W. P. Honywood, was perfectly unconscious and innocent of what was done, and that he was simply an instrument in the hands of his wicked and remorseless wife." The court was of the opinion that the matter objected to, though offensive, was not calculated to injure, and the motion was therefore denied.

is the same.¹ In some states the statutes declare it sufficient to produce the record of the foreign probate authenticated according to the act of Congress regulating the authentication of records, without obtaining a local decree of probate.²

In Respect to Personal Property, the foreign probate is exclusive as to the due execution of the will and the testamentary capacity of the testator, so that there can be no contest of the validity of the will on the application for ancillary probate.³ The foreign probate also creates a presumption that the jurisdiction of the court was founded on sufficient evidence of the last domicile of the testator,⁴ and this presumption is conclusive as to all persons who were parties to the proceeding.⁵

Real Estate. — In some states, where realty therein has been disposed of by the will of a nonresident owner, the same effect is given to probate at the testator's domicile as in the case of a will of personalty, that is, the probate is conclusive as to the validity of the will to pass the title to the land devised.⁶ In the absence, however, of a statute to that effect, it is generally held that foreign probate of a will of lands does not establish the validity of the will, but that the will must appear to have been executed in accordance with the lex loci rei sitæ.⁷ Ordinarily the record of the foreign probate should show that the will was duly executed in accordance with the law of the situs;⁸ but defects of evidence in this regard may be supplied on the ancillary probate of the authenticated copy of the will,¹ and if the will itself shows compliance with the local statute, it is immaterial that the fact is not recited in the record of the foreign probate.²

XIII. LOST, SUPPRESSED, OR DESTROYED WILLS — 1. General Principles —

a. EFFECT OF LOSS OR DESTRUCTION. — A will which has been destroyed without the knowledge or consent of the testator, or which has been lost, does not on that account cease to be the testator's will, but its contents may be proven by secondary evidence, as in the case of other lost instruments, with the same effect as if the writing had been produced.³ This follows from the principle that a will duly executed according to law remains in force so long as it is not revoked, and becomes operative at the death of the testator.⁴

Subsequent Discovery of Lost Will. — The probate of a lost will granted on proof of its contents will not bar the probate of the original will, if it is afterwards discovered. The form of probate in such case should be that it is established until a more authentic copy can be brought in.⁵

b. MATTERS REQUIRED TO BE PROVED. — In order that an alleged lost or destroyed will may be proved in the probate court or otherwise established as the decedent's will, it must be shown that the decedent had made a valid will according to law, that such will has not been revoked, and that it has been lost or destroyed; and when these preliminary facts are shown, the contents of the will must be proved.⁶

c. NECESSITY OF PROVING ENTIRE WILL. — Some authorities hold that a will cannot be admitted to probate on proof of a part only of its contents, but that the entire will must be proved as made,⁷ in which respect they seem to partially adopt the early rule of the ecclesiastical courts;⁸ but other authorities adopt the more reasonable rule that in case a part only of the contents of a will can be proved, probate may be granted as to such part.⁹

d. TIME OF LOSS OR DESTRUCTION — (1) Before Testator's Death. — In the absence of any statutory provision on the subject, a will lost or destroyed

7. Rule that Entire Contents of Will Must Be Proved. — Todd v. Rennick, 13 Colo. 546; Butler v. Butler, 5 Harr. (Del.) 178; Rhodes v. Vinson, 9 Gill (Md.) 169; Davis v. Sigourney, 8 Met. (Mass.) 487; McNally v. Brown, 5 Redf. (N. Y.) 372; Matter of Ruser, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 31.

8. Rule of Ecclesiastical Courts. — In Tucker v. Phipps, 3 Atk. 360, it was said that the ecclesiastical courts imposed the almost insuperable difficulty of proving the will in its very words.

9. Rule Allowing Probate as Far as Contents Are Proved. — Sugden v. St. Leonards, 1 P. D. 154; Skeggs v. Horton, 82 Ala. 352; Burge v. Hamilton, 72 Ga. 569; Jones v. Casler, 139 Ind. 382, 47 Am. St. Rep. 274; Steele v. Price, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 72; Jackson v. Jackson, 4 Mo. 210; Dickey v. Malechi, 6 Mo. 177, 34 Am. Dec. 130.

In Vining v. Hall, 40 Miss. 83, this question was raised, but was not decided.

In Massachusetts the rule is laid down that any substantial provision of a lost will, which is complete in itself and independent of the other provisions, may, when proved, be admitted to probate, though other provisions cannot be proved, if the validity and operation of the part which is proved are not affected by those parts which cannot be proved. Tarbell v. Forbes, 177 Mass. 238, explaining Davis v. Sigourney, 8 Met. (Mass.) 487; Durfee v. Durfee, 8 Met. (Mass.) 490, note.

before the death of the testator is as much entitled to probate as one which was in existence at the time of the testator's death, and was afterwards destroyed or lost.¹

(2) After Testator's Death. — In some states, however, the statutes authorize the probate or establishment of such a will only in case it is proved to have been in existence at the time of the testator's death² or was fraudulently destroyed in his lifetime;³ and the reason assigned for legislation of this sort is that the court would be much more likely to be imposed on when the loss or destruction occurred in the lifetime of the testator than it would in a case where the loss or destruction was after the testator's death.⁴

2. Jurisdiction — a. IN ENGLAND — (1) Wills of Personality. — It seems always to have been the rule in England that in case of the loss, destruction, or suppression of a will of personalty the ecclesiastical courts had jurisdiction to grant probate on sufficient proof of the due execution of the will, its loss, etc., and its contents.⁵ The proponent, however, was required to prove the contents of the will in the very words thereof, and also to prove the whole will, though the other parts of it did not belong to or regard his legacy. This was generally a matter of almost insuperable difficulty, and therefore a legatee, instead of citing the executor in the ecclesiastical court, was permitted to sue in equity for his legacy on the ground of spoliation or suppression.⁶ And now, since the Judicature Act, consolidating certain courts, the usual practice is to apply to the probate division for the probate of a will which has been lost, destroyed, or suppressed.⁷

(2) Wills of Real Estate. — In case of the loss or destruction of a will of real estate, the only remedy of a devisee was to establish the will by a suit in equity,⁸ because the ecclesiastical courts had no jurisdiction to grant probate of a will of realty; but since the change of the law in this particular⁹ it would seem that the probate division, in which is now vested the jurisdiction formerly exercised by the ecclesiastical courts, may grant probate of a lost or destroyed will of real estate.

b. IN UNITED STATES. — There is a conflict of authority in the United States as to whether a court of probate has jurisdiction, independently of statute, to admit a lost or destroyed will to probate. In some states it is held that no such power exists, and that the only remedy in such cases is in chancery.¹⁰ On the other hand, there are cases which hold that probate courts have inherent power to admit to probate wills which have been lost or destroyed.¹ But, however this may be from a technical point of view, the probate courts in the United States are generally invested by statute with jurisdiction to admit to probate wills which have been lost or destroyed,² and in some states this jurisdiction is exclusive,³ while in others it is concurrent with the equity jurisdiction in the premises.⁴

3. Who May Procure or Oppose Probate or Establishment. — The probate of a lost or destroyed will may be procured by any person who is interested therein,⁵ as in any other case of probate.⁶ And so, too, persons interested in the intestacy of the decedent may oppose the probate.⁷

4. Evidence — a. PROOF OF EXECUTION — (1) Fact of Execution. — The first step in a proceeding for the probate or establishment of an alleged lost or destroyed will is to prove that the decedent had, in fact, made a will. This fact cannot be proved merely by evidence of declarations of the decedent that he had made a will.⁸ There must be evidence that a will had been seen by a witness,⁹ or the existence must be admitted by the party claiming in

In Arkansas it is held that the court of probate has no jurisdiction in case of lost or destroyed wills, the statute conferring such jurisdiction on the courts of equity, and it is held that such jurisdiction is exclusive. Waggener v. Lyles, 29 Ark. 47.

In New York also it was held in an early case that the surrogate court had no jurisdiction to set up a lost will in the absence of statutory authority. Bulkley v. Redmond, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 281. But it is now provided by statute in that state that a lost or destroyed will may be admitted to probate in any case where the judgment establishing it could be rendered by the supreme court. See the next following note but one, Statutory Jurisdiction in United States.

Pennsylvania. — Foster's Appeal, 87 Pa. St. 67, 30 Am. Rep. 340, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 567, 34 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 222.

3. Exclusive Jurisdiction of Probate Court. — McDaniel v. Pattison, 98 Cal. 86; Morningstar v. Selby, 15 Ohio 345.

In Alabama it has been held that the statute giving the orphans' court full jurisdiction of all testamentary matters denies this cognizance to any other tribunal, even to chancery, except in peculiar cases requiring the exercise of its extraordinary powers; such, for instance, as involve matters of trust and require an account to be taken, or where for other purposes a discovery, on oath, from a party in interest is essential to the merits of the controversy. Apperson v. Cottrell, 3 Port. (Ala.) 51, 29 Am. Dec. 239.

In Kentucky, also, chancery jurisdiction seems to be limited to cases where there is an alleged spoliation or suppression, or where a discovery is indispensable, or some peculiar circumstances which would be defeated by a proceeding in the court of probate and which would be obviated by the chancellor. Hunt v. Hamilton, 9 Dana (Ky.) 91; Campbell v. West, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 243; Barnes v. Edward, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 640.

4. Concurrent Jurisdictions. — Matter of Reiffeld, (Surrogate Ct.) 36 Misc. (N. Y.) 472; McCormick v. Jernigan, 110 N. Car. 406.

In New York the court of chancery formerly had jurisdiction to establish lost or destroyed wills. Bowen v. Idley, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 46. And this power is now conferred on the supreme court. Donlon v. Kimball, 61 N. Y. App. Div. 31; Schultz v. Schultz, 35 N. Y. 653, 91 Am. Dec. 88; Hook v. Pratt, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 102; Voorhees v. Voorhees, 39 N. Y. 463, 100 Am. Dec. 458, affirming 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 119; Jackson v. Betts, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 208.

5. Who May Procure Probate of Lost Will. — Donlon v. Kimball, 61 N. Y. App. Div. 31; Chittenden's Will, Tuck. (N. Y.) 135; Taylor v. Bennett, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 57, 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. 95.

6. As to the persons entitled to procure the probate of wills generally, see supra, this title, Who May Propound Will for Probate.

7. Who May Oppose Probate. — Clark's Succession, 11 La. Ann. 124.

8. Declarations of Decedent Not Competent Evidence of Making a Will. — Clark v. Morton, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 235, 28 Am. Dec. 667; Tynan v. Paschal, 27 Tex. 286, 84 Am. Dec. 619.

9. Evidence that Witness Has Seen Will. — Clark v. Morton, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 235, 28 Am. Dec. 667. Thus, there is sufficient evidence that the decedent had made a will where a witness testifies that he saw decedent sign a paper which he declared to be his will, and opposition to it.¹ Declarations by the decedent that he had made no will, however, are admissible to refute the claim that a will had been made.²

(2) Formality of Execution. — In a proceeding for the probate or establishment of a lost or destroyed will, compliance with all the formalities of execution required by law must be shown just as if the writing itself were produced before the court. This proof should be made by direct evidence, that is, by the testimony of the subscribing witnesses, where their testimony is procurable.³ If the subscribing witnesses are dead, or for any other reason their testimony is not procurable, resort may be had to secondary evidence.⁴

The Declarations of the Testator are held to be not sufficient of themselves to prove the due execution of the will,⁵ and the reason assigned for this is that the exercise of the extraordinary power being conditioned on the observance of formalities prescribed by statute, one cannot, by his own mere assertion, establish that he has fulfilled the required conditions.⁶

b. PROOF OF LOSS OR DESTRUCTION — (1) In General. — The loss or destruction of a will may, in general, be proved by any evidence which establishes that fact,⁷ but the evidence must be positive and sufficient to overcome both the presumption of revocation by the testator and the presumption of innocence on the part of a third person charged with destroying the will.⁸

Motive. — Where it is claimed that a will was destroyed, not by the testator, but by a third person, it is competent to show a motive therefor on the part of such person, and an earlier will containing a more liberal provision for him than the will alleged to have been destroyed is admissible to show the motive.⁹

(2) Destruction by Testator. — Since the power of a testator to revoke his will depends on his mental capacity to form an intent at the time of the alleged revocating act,¹⁰ the destruction of a will by the testator while of an unsound mind is not a revocation of the will, and therefore it may be admitted to probate as in any other case of destruction.¹¹ So, too, the that the witness and another person signed such instrument as attesting witnesses. Matter of Harris, 10 Wash. 555.

1. Admission of Existence of Will. — Clark v. Morton, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 235, 28 Am. Dec. 667.

2. Declarations Against Will. — Durant v. Ashmore, 2 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 184.

3. Formality of Execution in General. — Scott v. Maddox, 113 Ga. 795; In re Lasance, 7 Ohio Dec. 246, 5 Ohio N. P. 20; McKenna v. McMichael, 189 Pa. St. 440.

Even where a copy of a lost will made from memory was admitted to probate by the register of wills, and recorded, it was held that a certified copy of such a paper, not showing that the will was properly attested or the other requirements of the statute complied with, is not admissible in evidence to show a devise of land. Hale v. Monroe, 28 Md. 98.

Proof by Direct Evidence. — Tynan v. Paschal, 27 Tex. 286, 84 Am. Dec. 619.

4. Death or Absence of Subscribing Witnesses — Secondary Evidence. — In re Lasance, 7 Ohio Dec. 246, 5 Ohio N. P. 20. But where the subscribing witnesses to a lost will are dead, the testimony of one witness to the handwriting of one of the subscribing witnesses is not sufficient to authorize a probate of the will; and the insufficiency of such testimony cannot be supplied by proof of declarations made by the supposed testator, after the execution of the instrument, to the effect that he had a will in existence of import similar to that offered for probate. Tynan v. Paschal, 27 Tex. 296, 84 Am. Dec. 619.

5. Due Execution Not Provable by Declaration of Testator. — Lane v. Hill, 68 N. H. 282, 73 Am. St. Rep. 591.

8. Sufficiency of Evidence. — Matter of Kennedy, (Surrogate Ct.) 30 Misc. (N. Y.) 1, affirmed 53 N. Y. App. Div. 105, 167 N. Y. 163.

In Matter of Cosgrove, (Surrogate Ct.) 31 Misc. (N. Y.) 422, it was shown that the testator made his will in due form of law and gave it to the executor for safe keeping. A few days before his death the testator referred to the fact that his will was in the hands of the executor, and declared himself satisfied with its provisions. The executor, after the testator's death, was unable to find the will. It was held that these facts were sufficient to show that the will was in existence at the death of the testator or was fraudulently destroyed in the testator's lifetime.

9. Motive for Destruction of Will. — Barker v. Bell, 49 Ala. 284.

10. See generally the title WILLS.

11. Destruction by Testator While Insane. — Apperson v. Cottrell, 3 Port. (Ala.) 51, 29 Am. Dec. 239.

In a suit to set up a will which had been destroyed by the testator, it is not sufficient to show that the will may have been in existence after the testator's mind had become so im destruction of the will by the testator may be the result of mistake or misapprehension, in which case there is not a revocation of the will destroyed. Thus, if the testator destroys a duly executed will in pursuance of an attempt to substitute a more formal or legible copy, and such copy lacks any of the formalities prescribed by law, the destroyed will may be admitted to probate.¹

(3) Proof of Search. — Unless there is conclusive proof of the destruction of a will alleged to have been lost or destroyed, the party seeking to set it up must prove that diligent search and inquiry have been made without success in those places where the will would most probably have been found if in existence,² and whether the proof of search is sufficient in any case to authorize the admission of parol evidence of the contents of the will is for the court to determine.³ But where the theory of the case is that the will was destroyed, proof of a search is unnecessary, because search is not consistent with that theory.⁴

(4) Presumption of Revocation — (a) Rule Stated. — Where it is proved that a deceased person had made a will which was last seen in his possession, and the will cannot be found after his death, the presumption, in the absence of other evidence, is that he destroyed the will with the intention of revoking it,⁵ and the strength of this presumption depends on the character of the testator's custody.⁶

If Possession Is Not Traced to the Testator, no presumption of revocation arises from the fact that the will cannot be found.⁷

(b) Nature of Presumption. — The cases generally hold that this presumption is one of law,¹ though it has been declared to be merely a presumption of fact.² But whether it is a presumption of law or a presumption of fact has been said to be immaterial, because in either case it must be rebutted by proof.³

(c) Rebutting Presumption — aa. EVIDENCE IN REBUTTAL GENERALLY. — In order to rebut the presumption of revocation arising from the fact that the will cannot be found, it may be shown that the will was destroyed by accident or mistake or while the testator was insane,⁴ or proof may be made of circumstances inconsistent with the theory that the testator destroyed it with the intention of revoking it,⁵ but the proof must be clear and satisfactory.⁶

Opportunity on Part of Third Persons. — The presumption of revocation is not rebutted by proof that persons interested to establish intestacy had an opportunity to destroy the will.⁷

Possession by Testator Shortly Before Death. — Neither is the presumption rebutted by proof that the will was in existence a short time before the testator's death.⁸

bb. BURDEN OF PROOF. — The burden of rebutting the presumption of revocation which arises from the fact that a will last seen in the possession of the testator cannot be found after his death, is on the person seeking to establish such will.⁹

cc. DECLARATIONS IN EVIDENCE — (aa. Declarations of Testator. — The rule of the English decisions and of some of the decisions of the United States is that the declarations of the testator are admissible to prove that he had not revoked a will which was proved to have been at one time in existence, but which could not be found after the testator's death,¹⁰ and also to show that an earlier will had been revoked by a later will which could not be found.¹ In New York, however, the rule is that the declarations of a testator, unaccompanied by any act on his part, are not admissible to prove the continued existence of a lost or destroyed will.²

(bb) Declarations of Third Persons. — The declaration of a third person that he destroyed the will or procured its destruction, without the knowledge or consent of the testator, are admissible so far as they constitute a part of the transaction, are illustrative of its character, and are contemporaneous with it,³ provided the declarant is a party to the proceeding.⁴

c. PROOF OF CONTENTS — (1) Admissibility of Evidence — (a) In General — Degrees of Secondary Evidence. — Where a will has been lost or destroyed, its contents may be proved by secondary evidence, as in the case of any other lost document. This is unquestioned. But whether there are degrees of secondary evidence by which the contents of the will may be proved, so as to require the production of the best obtainable evidence of this character, is a matter concerning which there is a conflict of authority.⁵

Derivation of Testator's Property. — Evidence as to the source from which the testator derived his property is not admissible to show an improbability that he would have disposed of it as claimed by the proponents of the lost will. If the property was his, he could dispose of it as he pleased.⁶

Stipulation of Counsel. — The contents of a lost will cannot be established by a stipulation of counsel, because proof thereof by competent evidence is required.⁷

Will Read at Testator's Funeral. — The fact that a paper purporting to be the will of a decedent was publicly read at the decedent's funeral in the presence of the heirs at law, and that possession was taken by the devisee according to the will so read, is competent evidence of its contents.⁸

(b) Copy of Will. — If the original draft or other copy of a lost or destroyed will is in existence and is properly identified, it is admissible in evidence to prove the contents of the paper which has been lost or destroyed.⁹

this case it appeared that the will had been placed in the custody of an executor, and the declarations of the testator indicated that he believed it to be still in the executor's possession. There was no evidence that the will had ever been returned to the testator's possession.

(e) Parol Evidence. — The contents of a lost will may be established by parol evidence, as in the case of any other lost document. This is a definitely settled doctrine which cannot now be questioned,¹ though in a comparatively recent case some doubt was expressed as to its soundness.²

Who May Testify. — A subscribing witness or any other person who has read the will may testify as to its contents.³

Refreshing Memory of Witness. — A witness testifying to the contents of a lost or destroyed will may, in a proper case, refresh his memory by referring to memoranda,⁴ but this principle does not extend to the use of an alleged copy of the will which has not been proved to be such copy.⁵

(d) Declarations — aa. DECLARATIONS OF TESTATOR. — The declarations of a testator made after the execution of his will are admissible as secondary evidence of its contents. The authorities are generally agreed as to this.⁶ Such declarations, however, are admissible only to corroborate other evidence, and are not of themselves sufficient to prove the contents of the will.⁷

bb. DECLARATIONS OF THIRD PERSONS. — The declarations of third persons when made against their interest are admissible, according to the general principles relating to such declarations, as evidence of the contents of the will,¹ especially where there is evidence of suppression or spoliation by the declarant.²

(2) Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence — (a) In General. — The rule as to the degree of the proof of the contents of a lost or destroyed will has been stated by the courts in various forms, mostly of equivalent import, as that the evidence must be "clear, full, and satisfactory," "clear and convincing," and the like.³ Some cases state the rule in yet stronger terms,⁴ and it has even been said that when the proof is by parol evidence only, it ought to be such as to satisfy one beyond all reasonable doubt;⁵ but this seems to prescribe too strict a measure of proof, and it has been so held.⁶

The Exact Language of the will need not be proved in any case. It is sufficient if the witnesses testify to the substance of the will, so that it can be incorporated in the decree if probate is granted.⁷

(b) Number of Witnesses — Proof by One Witness. — It is clear, on principle, that there is no reason for a greater quantum of proof on the probate of a lost will than is required to establish the contents of any other lost instrument, though greater caution should probably be observed in the case of a lost will. Therefore, unless a greater quantum of proof is prescribed by statute, the contents of a lost will may be established by the testimony of a single witness,⁸ and this rule is not affected by the fact that the statute of wills requires two or more subscribing witnesses to a will to render it valid.⁹

9. Requirement as to Attesting Witnesses. — Skeggs v. Horton, 82 Ala. 352.

Proof by Two Witnesses Required by Statute. — In some jurisdictions the statutes provide that the contents of a lost or destroyed will must be proved by the testimony of at least two witnesses.¹ This requirement is ordinarily answered if there are two witnesses to each and every part of the will,² though in some states the rule requires two witnesses, each of whom shall testify to the contents of the entire will.³

(c) Declarations of Testator. — The declarations of a testator, though admissible in evidence as tending to prove the contents of the will,⁴ are not of themselves sufficient to prove the contents, but are received only in corroboration of other evidence.⁵

XIV. HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS — Character and Condition of Instrument. — The rules governing the probate of holographic wills are necessarily based on the assumption that the testator in every case intended that the instrument should operate as his will in the form in which he left it, and the statutes in some jurisdictions contain special provisions relating to the evidence of this fact.⁶ If a paper on its face is, in legal construction, imperfect and unfinished, the presumption is against it, but evidence of intention is let in to rebut such presumption, and it may be shown either that the decedent abandoned the intention he once had of giving effect to the paper, or that he was in progress towards finishing it and was only prevented by the act of God.⁷

Proof of Testator's Handwriting. — The statutes governing holographic wills generally provide that such a will may be admitted to probate on proof that the body of the instrument is in the testator's handwriting, and also that he signed it,⁸ unless the signature of the testator is not necessary to constitute a will of this character.⁹

Number of Witnesses. — Some of the statutes require the proof of handwriting

Dist. 127; Matter of Harris, 10 Wash. 555. See also the statutes of the several states on the subject.

Copy of Draft Equivalent to One Witness. — Under the New York statute, a correct copy or draft of the will is equivalent to one witness. Sheridan v. Houghton, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 6 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 234.

2. Two Witnesses to Each Part of Will Held Sufficient. — Todd v. Rennick, 13 Colo. 546.

Morton*, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 235, 28 Am. Dec. 667.

6. Custody or Place of Keeping of Will. — The North Carolina statute requires proof that an alleged holographic will was found among the testator's valuable papers or had been placed by the testator in someone's hands for safe-keeping. Brown v. Eaton, 91 N. Car. 26; Harrison v. Burgess, 1 Hawks (8 N. Car.) 384.

The Tennessee statute is to the same effect. Crutcher v. Crutcher, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 377; Tate v. Tate, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 465.

To be "found among his valuable papers" implies that the will must have been placed there by the testator or with his knowledge and assent, and so deposited with intent and purpose at the time that it should be his will. Marr v. Marr, 2 Head (Tenn.) 303; Hooper v. McQuary, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 129.

7. Imperfect or Incomplete Instrument. — Forbes v. Gordon, 3 Phill. Ecc. 614.

Incomplete Attestation. — A will of land attested by only one witness may be probated on proof that the instrument is in the handwriting of the testator and was found among his valuable papers. Harrison v. Burgess, 1 Hawks (8 N. Car.) 384. See also Brown v. Beaver, 3 Jones L. (48 N. Car.) 516, 67 Am. Dec. 255; Matter of Soher, 78 Cal. 477. And the fact that a holographic will contains an attestation clause, unsigned by witnesses, does not show a lack of finality, because such a will does not require attestation. Perkins v. Jones, 84 Va. 358, 10 Am. St. Rep. 863.

8. Proof of Testator's Handwriting. — Ex p. Horner, 27 Ark. 443; Franklin v. Franklin, 90 Tenn. 44. And see the statutes of the several states.

to be made by a certain number of witnesses, usually two,¹ or three.² But unless the statute absolutely requires a certain number of witnesses one is sufficient, at least if there are corroborating circumstances.³

Effect of Probate. — Where an unattested will has been admitted to probate, but the record does not recite the evidence, it will be presumed that the will was proved to be in the testator's handwriting.⁴

XV. NUNCUPATIVE WILLS — In General. — Nuncupative wills are not regarded with favor, and therefore very strict proof is required by the courts of all the facts which the statute makes essential to the validity of such wills.⁵ The proponent must prove, not only the circumstances under which a nuncupative will may be made and the words spoken by the testator, but he must also prove that the testator, in some form, bade the persons present to bear witness that he was making his will, or, as the phrase is, the rogatio testium must be proved.⁶

Time of Proof. — The statutes generally require the testator's words to be proved in the probate court within six months from the time they were spoken, and after that time there can be no probate unless the words were reduced to writing within a specified number of days after they were spoken.⁷ The period for putting the words in writing in order that they may be proved after the lapse of six months varies somewhat. It is usually fixed at six days, though in some jurisdictions ten and even thirty days are allowed.⁸

Number of Witnesses. — Some of the statutes require proof of the testator's words by three witnesses,⁹ while other statutes make two witnesses sufficient.¹⁰ In any event, both or all of the witnesses must have been present together at the time the words were spoken by the testator, and each must testify to the entire matter. It is not sufficient that one witness should testify as to some of the testator's words and the other as to the residue.¹¹

PROBATE COURTS. — See the title SURROGATES' AND PROBATE COURTS.

PROCEDENDO. (See also the title MANDATE AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON, 13 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 835.) — A writ of procedendo ad judicium issues out of the court of chancery in England, and out of a superior court in the United States, where judges of any subordinate court delay the parties, as by not giving judgment on either side.¹² A procedendo is a writ commanding an inferior court to proceed to judgment; it gives no decision, but directs one.¹³

PROCEDURE. (See also PROCEEDING, post.) — The word "procedure" as a law term is not well understood. The term is so broad in its signification that it is seldom employed as a term of art. It includes in its meaning whatever is embraced by the three technical terms pleading, evidence, and practice. In this sense the word "practice" means those legal rules which direct the course of proceeding, to bring parties into the court, and the course of the court after they are brought in. And evidence, as a part of procedure, signifies those rules of law whereby we determine what testimony is to be admitted and what rejected in each case, and what is the weight to be given to the testimony admitted.¹

PROCEEDING. (See also SPECIAL PROCEEDING.)—In a general sense, the term "proceeding" includes the form and manner of conducting judicial business before a court or judicial officer; regular and orderly progress in form of law; including all possible steps in an action, from its institution to the execution of judgment. In a more particular sense, any application to a court of justice, however made, for aid in the enforcement of rights, for relief, for redress of injuries, for damages, or for any remedial object. In its general acceptance, this word means the form in which actions are to be brought and defended, the manner of intervening in suits, of conducting them, of opposing judgments, and of executing them.³ A proceeding is any step taken by a party in the progress of an action.⁴

1. Procedure. — Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 231, citing 1 Bishop on Criminal Procedure, § 2.

Procedure is a generic term, and comprehends pleadings, evidence, and practice. Kansas v. O'Connor, 36 Mo. App. 594.

Claims Against Insolvent Estate. — A statute provided that any creditor who should have or hold any security or lien upon any part of an insolvent estate should by affidavit put a value upon such security. In Matter of Chaffey, 30 U. C. Q. B. 73, it was held that specifying the value and amount of a security held, and putting a value on it under oath, and the other proceedings to be taken with respect to it, were not "a matter of procedure merely," and hence were not affected by legislation subsequent to the pendency of the action. See also In re Botsford, 22 U. C. C. P. 65.

Conflict of Laws. — As a general rule the lex fori controls in matters of procedure. In Cochran v. Ward, 5 Ind. App. 95, it was said: "Procedure, in this connection, applies to the nature of the action, as whether it shall be covenant, assumpsit, debt, etc., to the rules of pleading and evidence, the order and manner of trial, and the nature and effect of process, and perhaps to all other matters of remedy only, which are not incorporated into the contract as affecting its nature and obligatory character." See generally the title PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW, vol. 22, p. 1383.

2. Proceed — Issue. — See ISSUE, vol. 17, p. 539.

Sue. — A stipulation not to proceed against a party is an agreement not to sue. The court said: "To sue a man is certainly to proceed against him." Planters' Bank v. Houser, 57 Ga. 140.

Legal Proceedings. — To proceed, when applied to legal proceedings, means to commence and carry on a legal process. Iliff v. Weymouth, 40 Ohio St. 103.

3. Proceeding. — Exp. McGee, 33 Oregon 165, quoting Black's L. Dict. and Bouv. L. Dict.; Erwin v. U. S., 37 Fed. Rep. 488.

Limited Sense of Term. — Where a statute permitted appeals in all actions and proceedings, it was held that the term proceedings was not used in its ordinary sense of every step taken in the action. The court said: "We do not believe the legislature intended that the word should be understood in any such sense. But we do believe that the court should not depart from the well-known and established principles of the common law, and permit a cause to be brought before it by piecemeal for review, unless clearly authorized so to do by legislative enactment." Windt v. Banniza, 2 Wash. 154. See also Dossett v. St. Paul, etc., Lumber Co., (Wash. 1902) 69 Pac. Rep. 11.

4. Any Step Taken in Action. — Dodd v. Middleton, 63 Ga. 638; Hopewell v. State, 22 Ind. App. 489; Gordon v. State, 4 Kan. 501; Strom v. Montana Cent. R. Co., 81 Minn. 346; Johnson v. Jones, 2 Neb. 137; Wilson v. Allen, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 369; Williamson v. Champlin, Clarke (N. Y.) 9; Morewood v. Hollister, 6 N. Y. 320; Bulkeley v. Keteltas, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 741; Irwin v. Bellefontaine Bank, 6 Ohio St. 87; Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 94 Cal. 43.

The word proceeding includes all steps taken by the court, or by its officers under its precepts, from the institution of the suit to the close of the final process which may issue thereon. Cropper v. Coburn, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 468. To the same effect see Bruner v. Superior Ct., 92 Cal. 248.

Form and Power. — In St. Joseph Mfg. Co. v. Harrington, 53 Iowa 382, in construing a statute (now Code 1897, § 4485) providing that all proceedings prescribed for the Circuit Court (now District Court) shall be pursued in justices' courts, it was said: "This does not confer power; it relates to the manner of the exercise of power. The term proceedings does not relate to matters pertaining to the powers of the court, but to the form and manner of the exercise of power."

"Proceeding" More Comprehensive than "Judgment." — "The word proceeding, in a judicial sense, is much more comprehensive than that of 'judgment,' the former very frequently including the latter." Yeager v. Wright, 112 Ind. 235, in which case it was held that the certificate of a justice of the peace to a transcript that it contained "a correct statement of the proceedings" sufficiently complied with the provision of an Indiana statute requiring that copies of proceedings before a justice of the peace be certified by him as "true and complete" copies of such proceedings and judgments.

In State v. Gordon, 8 Wash. 488, it was held, where a statute required a party instituting an action or proceeding to pay a fee of four dollars when the cause was entered or when the first paper on his part was filed, that this had no application to the filing and entry of a transcript of a judgment of a justice of the peace in the execution docket of the county clerk.

"Proceeding" in Sense of "Action." — Pryor v. City Offices Co., 10 Q. B. D. 508, per Brett, M. R. See also Mars v. Oro Fino Min. Co., 7 S. Dak. 617. Compare Strom v. Montana Cent. R. Co., 81 Minn. 346.

"A suit is certainly a proceeding." Dodd v. Middleton, 63 Ga. 638, per Jackson, J.

Advertisement for Sale of Land. — See Smith v. Brown, 20 Ont. 165.

Filing of Affidavit in Action of Replevin a Proceeding. — Wilson v. Macklin, 7 Neb. 50.

Filing of Appeal Bond a Proceeding. — Irwin v. Bellefontaine Bank, 6 Ohio St. 87. See also Wilson v. Allen, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 369.

Arbitration — Application by Letter. — An English statute provided that if any party to a submission should commence any legal proceedings in any court against any other party to the submission, such other party might apply to the court to stay the proceedings. It was held that proceeding, in this connection, meant some application to the court by summons or motion, and did not include an application by letter or notice from one party to another, or by correspondence between their respective solicitors. Ives v. Willans, (1894) 1 Ch. 68. And see Caughell v. Brower, 17 Ont. Pr. 438.

In Wells v. Lane, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 99, it was held that a parole submission to arbitration of a cause pending in court was not a proceeding in the cause.

Assignee for Benefit of Creditors. — An attorney was to have a fee of ten per cent. for collecting a note provided he had to resort to judicial proceedings. It was held that the attorney was not entitled to the fee on the acceptance and payment of the note by an assignee for the benefit of creditors, the assignee not having been appointed by a court and not being under the direction and control of one. The court said: "If presenting a claim to an assignee is collecting by judicial proceeding, presenting it to any agent or trustee would be." Briam v. Sullivan, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 66 S. W. Rep. 572.

Attachment. — Cropper v. Coburn, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 468.

Embraces Proceedings Both Before and After Judgment. — Ross v. Farewell, 5 U. C. C. P. 29.

Bill of Exception. — In Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 94 Cal. 43, it was held that a settlement of a bill of exception was a proceeding in an action, and that an objection to the settlement of the bill and a motion to disregard it on the ground that it was not served in time was a proceeding.

Capias. — Ball v. Stanley, 6 M. & W. 396.

Case and Proceedings Distinguished. — See Hopewell v. State, 22 Ind. App. 489. And see CASE, vol. 5, p. 748.

Presentation to County Court of Claim Against Estate of Decedent Commencement of Action or Proceeding. — Frawley v. Cosgrove, 83 Wis. 441.

Claim Before County Board. — In Maloney v. Douglas County, (Neb. 1902) 89 N. W. Rep. 243, it was said: "The phrase 'action or proceeding' in which the lien is given is certainly broad enough to include the prosecution of a claim before a county board."

Costs. — In Rich v. Husson, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 617, it was held that the term proceedings did not include the right to recover costs, nor the amount to be recovered.

But in Reg. v. London, etc., R. Co., L. R. 3 Q. B. 170, it was held that the taxation of costs was a proceeding within a statute which provided that from and after the passage of a certain act no action, suit, attachment, execution, or other proceeding against a named railroad company should be commenced or continued.

Not Applicable to County-seat Proceedings. — Gordon v. State, 4 Kan. 489. See also State v. Butler County, 31 Kan. 461.

Criminal Proceeding. — In Hopewell v. State, 22 Ind. App. 494, it was said that "criminal proceeding," within the meaning of Burns's Stat. Ind. 1894, § 2127, means any step taken in the progress of a criminal action, and does not include criminal conduct on the part of one against whom no charge has been legally preferred.

In Yates v. Reg., 14 Q. B. D. 654, it was said, per Brett, M. R., that the term "criminal proceeding" is one much wider than "criminal prosecution." Yates v. Reg., 14 Q. B. D. 648.

Proceedings of Sheriff under Execution Part of Proceedings in a Cause. — Smith v. Union Bank, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 518; Ward v. Cohen, 3 S. Car. 338. And see infra, this note, Judicial Sale.

Levy and Sale under Execution a Proceeding. — Mills v. Provident L. & T. Co., (C. C. A.) 100 Fed. Rep. 344. See also In re Perkins Beach Lead Min. Co., 7 Ch. D. 371.

Proceeding by Execution a Proceeding by Suit at Law. — Vanderveer v. Conover, 16 N. J. L. 487.

Final Process — Jail Liberties. — A United States statute provided that "writs of execution and other final process issued on judgments and decrees rendered in any courts of the United States and the proceedings thereupon, shall be the same, except their style, in each state respectively as are now used in the courts of such state," etc. It was held that the allowance of jail liberties was a part of the proceeding upon such writs of execution, within the meaning of the act. U. S. v. Knight, 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 371.

And in construing this statute in Amis v. Smith, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 313, the court said: "We understand the phrase 'the proceedings' an act necessary to be done in order to attain a given end; it is a prescribed thereupon' to mean the exercise of all the duties of the ministerial officers of the states prescribed by the laws of the state for the purpose of obtaining the fruits of judgments." See also Pollard v. Cocke, 19 Ala. 197.

Foreclosure of Mortgage. — "The statutory proceedings to foreclose a mortgage are not 'proceedings in court,' so as to authorize the court to remedy defects in them." Dwight v. Phillips, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 119.

But in Hogan v. Hoyt, 37 N. Y. 300, it was held that a judgment of foreclosure and a report of sale were proceedings.

Drawing of Grand Jury. — A charter declared that a certain police justice should have all the authority, powers, and rights of a justice of the peace in civil and criminal proceedings. It was held that such police justice had the authority of a justice of the peace in respect to the drawing of a grand jury. Hogan v. State, 30 Wis. 428. See also Bruner v. Superior Ct., 92 Cal. 248; Matter of Tillery, 43 Kan. 192.

Imprisonment. — In Ex p. McGee, 33 Oregon 165, it was held that an imprisonment for failure to pay a fine was a proceeding, within the meaning of a charter providing for proceedings before a municipal court.

Instructions to Jury. — In Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Brassfield, 51 Kan. 174, it was said of the term proceedings: "In a judicial sense it fairly includes the instructions given to the jury."

Judgment Roll. — In People v. Stephens, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 227, it was held, where an order was entered at special term for the defendant on demurrer, in an action to set aside a contract for fraud, and it was arranged and agreed between counsel for the respective parties that the defendants should waive the costs in the action and the plaintiffs would not appeal from the decision, and that "no further proceedings should be taken in the action, but that the same should be considered at an end and finally disposed of," that such agreement did not preclude the defendants from entering and filing a judgment roll upon the decision.

Judicial Sale. — In American Assoc. v. Hurst, 16 U. S. App. 325, a sale of land by a sheriff under an execution issued out of a court of equity was held to be a proceeding. See also Neil v. Almond, 29 Ont. 63.

Jurat. — In Johnson v. Jones, 2 Neb. 137, it was said: "The swearing to the petition is a proceeding; and so is attaching the jurat to the affidavit. It is clearly a proceeding by which the suitor takes steps to prosecute his action."

Jurisdictional Proceedings. — An act provided that whenever any authority should be exercised by any officer pursuant to any provision of a certain title, the proceedings might be removed into the Supreme Court by certiorari. On a certiorari pursuant to this act the Supreme Court held that only such proceedings as were jurisdictional could be thus removed. The Court of Appeals reversed this decision, holding that the term proceeding, as used in the act, meant "all the matters connected with or attending the exercise of the power which are necessary to enable the court of review to determine its validity and correctness." Morewood v. Hollister, 6 N. Y. 320.

Mandamus. — In Murphy v. Utter, (1902) 22 U. S. Sup. Ct. Rep. 782, a petition for a writ of mandamus was held to be a "proceeding theretofore taken," within the meaning of the saving clause in Rev. Stat. Ariz. (1887), § 2934.

Mechanic's Lien. — In Morgan v. Chapple, 10 Kan. 224, it was held that the word proceedings applied to mechanics' liens filed.

Motion. — A statute provided that a party to the record of any civil action or proceeding might be examined upon the trial thereof, as if under cross-examination, at the instance of the adverse party. In construing this statute the court said: "We hold that it applies to the trial of any civil action involving an issue of fact; also, to the trial of any proceeding involving such an issue which the parties are entitled as a matter of right to have heard upon the oral testimony of witnesses and other evidence as in ordinary trials. A party is not entitled as matter of right to have a motion involving an issue of fact heard and tried on the oral testimony of witnesses." Strom v. Montana Cent. R. Co., 81 Minn. 349.

Notice. — Under a Wisconsin statute which provided that unless proceedings should be had within one year from the entry of a certain order in court, the cause should be dismissed, etc., it was held that the notice of an attorney to the adverse party that the cause had been remitted, and that on a day named he would move the court to vacate its judgment, was such a proceeding. Bonesteel v. Orvis, 31 Wis. 117.

Pleadings. — A Kansas statute (now Code Civ. Pro. Kan., § 393) provides that "an action may be dismissed without prejudice to a future action, * * * by the court, for disobedience by the plaintiff of an order concerning the proceedings in the action." It was held that the word proceedings in this connection meant any proceedings in the case, including the pleadings. Jackson County v. Hoaglin, 5 Kan. 559.

In School Dist. Number Forty-Nine v. Cooper, 44 Neb. 714, it was held that the word proceedings included duly certified copies of the pleadings on which an action was tried, within a statute requiring that the plaintiff in error should file a transcript of the proceedings.

But in Wilson v. Macklin, 7 Neb. 50, the terms "pleading" and proceeding were distinguished.

Preliminary Examination. — A statute provided for a transfer by the justice before whom an action or proceeding was pending to another justice, "if on the return of the process, or at any time before the trial commences," a certain affidavit was made. In construing this statute the court said: "The question in the case is, do these provisions apply to an examination by a justice of the peace, under chapter 106, of a person accused of crime? Such an examination is, of course, a proceeding; and if there were nothing else but that word and the word 'action' to indicate the cases in mode of action for carrying into effect a legal right, and, so far from involving any consideration or determination of the right, presupposes its existence.¹

PROCEEDING IN REM AND IN PERSONAM. — See REM AND PERSONAM.

PROCEEDING TO SEA. — See SEA.

PROCEEDS. — The term "proceeds" is defined as the amount proceeding or accruing from some possession or transaction, especially the sum derived from the sale of goods; the useful or material results of an action or course.²

which a transfer can be demanded, the right would apply to such examination. But the words 'at any time before the trial commences' and 'proceed to hear and determine the same' show that the proceeding must be one in which there is to be a trial before the justice, and which on such trial he is to determine." State v. Bergman, 37 Minn. 408.

Preparation of Case Out of Court. — A statute provided that whenever, in a criminal action or proceeding, any attorney defended the accused by order of court, the county in which such criminal action or proceeding arose should pay to such attorney a reasonable sum per day for each day actually occupied for such trial or proceeding. It was held that the word proceeding in the phrase "such trial or proceeding" must be taken to have been used in the same sense as when used in the preceding part of the statute, i. e., as referring to something in the nature of a criminal action but distinguished therefrom, and that under the statute an attorney was not entitled to compensation for time spent in preparing the trial out of court, on the ground that such time was spent in the proceeding. Green Lake County v. Waupaca County, (Wis. 1902), 89 N. W. Rep. 549.

Process. — See PROCESS, post.

Appointment of Receiver a Proceeding. — Phelps v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Assoc., (C. C. A.) 112 Fed. Rep. 463.

Removal from Position in Court Room. — A statute provided that every justice of the peace should keep a record of all proceedings before him. A justice of the peace ordered a respondent to remove from a position he had taken near the bench. It was held that the justice need not enter such an order upon the record. State v. Copp, 15 N. H. 214.

Replevin Bond. — In Meloche v. Reaume, 34 U. C. Q. B. 606, it was held that an order of a judge setting aside a writ of replevin "and all proceedings thereon subsequent to the issue thereof," admitting that it extended to a replevin bond, did not of itself absolutely annul the bond so that to an action on it such an order could be pleaded as a defense.

Confined to Special Proceedings. — Windt v. Banniza, 2 Wash. 153.

Filing of Stay Bond a Proceeding. — State v. Russell, 17 Neb. 203. See also O'Dea v. Washington County, 3 Neb. 118.

The Term Proceedings Has Been Held to Include Tax Proceedings. — See Bowman v. Cockrill, 6 Kan. 327; Matter of Tillery, 43 Kan. 192.

Writ of Revivor a Proceeding. — Caspar v. Keachie, 41 U. C. Q. B. 599.

Proceeding in Court. (See supra, this note, Foreclosure of Mortgage.) — A proceeding in court is an act done by the authority or direction of the court, express or implied. Bulkeley v. Keteltas, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 741.

In Ex p. Board of Trade, 13 Q. B. D. 492, it was held that a second meeting of creditors, under a bankruptcy provision, held to consider the confirmation of a scheme of arrangement of the debtor's affairs, accepted at the first meeting, was not a proceeding in court.

Proceeding Instituted. — In Hood v. Barrs v. Heriot, (1897) A. C. 177, it was held that an appeal by a woman from a judgment in an action in which she was a defendant was not a proceeding instituted.

Proceedings Supplementary. — See the title SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS, 21 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 85.

1. Performance of Act. — Neil v. Almond, 29 Ont. 69; Rich v. Husson, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 620; Fargo v. Helmer, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 19.

2. Proceeds. — Matter of Gates, (Supm. Ct. App. Div.) 31 Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 91, 51 N. Y. App. Div. 352, citing Cent. Dict. and Stand. Dict. See also Tradesmen's Nat. Bank v. National Surety Co., 169 N. Y. 563.

Proceeds is "a word of great generality." Phelps v. Harris, 101 U. S. 380; Matter of Gates, (Supm. Ct. App. Div.) 31 Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 91, 51 N. Y. App. Div. 352.

Clear Proceeds. — See CLEAR, vol. 6, p. 109; NET PROCEEDS, vol. 21, p. 530. And see Board of Education v. Henderson, 126 N. Car. 699.

Gross Proceeds. — A lease of a hotel stipulated that the lessor should pay out of the proceeds of the business a certain sum of rent. It was held that in determining the question whether the word proceeds was to be construed the same as "net profits," or as "receipts," or "gross receipts," resort must be had to the contract itself for the meaning which the parties themselves intended should be given thereto, and that in the connection in which it was used the term was equivalent to "gross receipts." Smith v. Hubert, 83 Hun (N. Y.) 508. And for proceeds in the sense of gross proceeds, see also Caperton v. Caperton, 36 W. Va. 484; Dallas County v. Club Land, etc., Co., (Tex. 1902), 66 S. W. Rep. 296. And see GROSS, vol. 14, p. 1118.

Same — Proceeds of Fines. — The Constitution of Kansas provided that the proceeds of fines should be applied to the support of the common schools. In construing this provision in Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. State, 22 Kan. 14, the court said: "The proceeds of fines' mean, of course, the moneys collected from fines, the amounts realized from fines, and just such amounts, no more and no less. 'The proceeds of fines' evidently mean all the proceeds, not merely the clear proceeds; not a portion thereof, but all." And see CLEAR, vol. 6, p. 109.

The term is one of equivocal import. Its construction depends much upon the context and the subject-matter to which it is applied. Thus, if a testator should direct that his property be sold, and the proceeds disposed of or distributed in a certain manner, no one could doubt that the whole corpus or principal was intended.¹ But should he order that it be rented or invested, then "proceeds" would necessarily be limited to the net income, especially if the interest given was for life only.² The term does not necessarily mean money.³

PROCESS. (See also the titles DUE PROCESS OF LAW, vol. 10, p. 287; NOTICE, vol. 21, p. 580; PUBLICATION, post. And see ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR., titles SERVICE OF PROCESS AND PAPERS, vol. 19, p. 567; SUMMONS AND

Right to Proceeds.—An Act of Congress entitled a claimant of captured and abandoned property to recover on proof of ownership and his right to the proceeds. In construing this provision in Woodruff's Case, 7 Ct. Cl. 613, the court said: "These words, 'ownership' and 'right to the proceeds,' are not technical words, and in their ordinary meaning they include all property and rights of property which may be available for pecuniary benefit."

Advances.—The owner of property in the hands of a factor directed that a certain debt should be discharged out of its proceeds. It was held that the factor might advance money to pay the debt. Hundley v. Spencer, 1 Rob. (La.) 211.

Proceeds of Mines.—The Constitution of Nevada provided for the taxation of all property, real, personal, and possessory, except mines and mining claims, the proceeds of which alone should be taxed. It was held that this meant that the entire annual proceeds of the mine were subject to taxation; and not the mere proceeds on hand when the assessor happened to visit the mines. State v. Kruttschnitt, 4 Nev. 178.

Proceeds of Note.—In Wheeler, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Winnett, (Neb. 1902) 91 N. W. Rep. 515, it was said: "When we speak of the proceeds of a sale, we mean the sum that is paid for the things sold. When we speak of the proceeds of a note, we ordinarily mean the amount due or collected upon it. When we send a note to an attorney for collection with instructions to collect it and remit the proceeds, it is usually inferred that he will retain his collection fee, and the proceeds in such a case may be held to be the amount remitted after deducting such fee."

Proceeds of a Sale.—In Andrews v. Johns, 59 Ohio St. 71, it was said: "The term proceeds, when used in connection with sale, as the lexicographers seem to agree (see Webster, the Standard, Rapalje, and Bouvier), means a sum of money derived from the sale of property. If money be derived from the sale, then it has yielded proceeds."

In Matter of Mitchell, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 372, it was held that the proceeds of a sale were ordinarily the amount thereof after deducting the expenses, including taxes.

Same—Mortgage.—A mortgage covering a homestead and other lands was foreclosed, and the entire premises were sold, the nonexempt portion being worth less than the amount of the debt. It was held that the surplus money remaining after satisfaction of the mortgage debt should be deemed proceeds of the sale of the homestead. Clancey v. Alme, 98 Wis. 229.

Same—Bid by Mortgage Creditor.—In Andrews v. Johns, 59 Ohio St. 65, it was held that where land is bid in by a mortgage creditor whose mortgage is the first lien, and the bid is less than the amount of the debt so secured, the bid cannot be considered the proceeds of the sale within a statute providing that in judicial sales the court may order the payment of all incumbrances and liens upon any of the property sold out of the proceeds thereon.

Sale of Judgment.—In Matter of Gates, 51 N. Y. App. Div. 350, it was held that an attorney had a lien upon moneys realized by an assignee for the benefit of creditors, upon the sale of judgments recovered by such attorney for the assignors. Such moneys are proceeds of a judgment within the meaning of Code Civ. Pro. New York, § 66, which provides that an attorney's lien upon a judgment recovered by him shall attach to the proceeds thereof.

1. Corpus.—Thomson's Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 46. And see Belmont v. Pouvert, 35 N. Y. Super. Ct. 208; Knox v. Knox, 59 Wis. 172; Allen v. Barnes, 5 Utah 100. And that the term is of equivocal import, see also Wheeler, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Winnett, (Neb. 1902) 91 N. W. Rep. 515; Matter of Gates, (Supm. Ct. App. Div.) 31 Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 91, 51 N. Y. App. Div. 352.

2. Proceeds in Sense of Income.—Roberts's Appeal, 92 Pa. St. 419; Thomson's Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 46; Chubbock v. Murray, 30 Nova Scotia 23.

In Hunt v. Williams, 126 Ind. 495, it was said: "A devise of the proceeds of real estate is not materially different from a devise of the income."

3. Money Not Necessarily Implied.—It was argued that a direction in a will to invest the proceeds of the testator's estate indicated that a sale was meant. The court said: "This does not necessarily follow. Proceeds are not necessarily money. This is also a word of great generality. Taking the words in their ordinary sense, a general power to dispose of land or real estate and to take in return therefor such proceeds as one thinks best will include the power of disposing of them in exchange for other lands. It would be a disposal of the lands parted with; and the lands received would be the proceeds." Phelps v. Harris, 101 U. S. 380.

PROCESS, vol. 20, p. 1099.)—The term "process" comprehends all mandates of a court issued to its officer commanding him to perform certain services within his official cognizance; and embraces every writ that may be necessary to institute or to carry on an action or suit and to execute the judgment of the court.¹ "Process" is so denominated because, it proceeds or issues forth in order to bring the defendant into court to answer the charge preferred, and signifies the writ or judicial means by which he is brought to answer.² In its largest sense "process" is equivalent to procedure, including all the steps and proceedings in a cause, from its commencement to its conclusion.³ Thus, the

1. Process.—Aven v. Wilson, 61 Ark. 287. See also U. S. v. Murphy, 82 Fed. Rep. 899; Birmingham Dry Goods Co. v. Bledsoe, 113 Ala. 419; Gilmer v. Bird, 15 Fla. 410; Perry v. Lorillard F. Ins. Co., 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 204.

Other Definitions.—Process has been defined as "a writ or summons issued in the course of judicial proceedings." Comp. Laws Dak. (1887), § 4807, quoted in McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 2 S. Dak. 383.

Process, at common law, is "the means of compelling the defendant to appear in court." And. L. Dict., quoted in Dumars v. Denver, (Colo. App. 1901) 65 Pac. Rep. 588.

"Process is a mandatory precept issuing from a court." Brown v. Way, 33 Ga. 191.

In Palmer v. Allen, 5 Day (Conn.) 200, it was said that "process, in one sense, is the method to be pursued by law to compel a compliance with the original writ by giving the party notice to obey it; a warning to appear in court at the return of the original writ. On failure of obedience, further process is said to be had, by attachment, etc."

Section 4175 of the Political Code of California provides that process shall include "all writs, warrants, summons, and orders of courts of justice or judicial officers." In construing this provision together with that defining "notice," in Bruner v. Superior Ct., 92 Cal. 247, the court said: "It is impossible to imagine any sort of a thing ordered by any court or judge thereof, which has to be executed by an officer, that is not embraced in the above definitions; and the general statutory provision is that it [process] must be executed by the sheriff." See also in Minnesota, Hinkley v. St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co., 9 Minn. 55.

In Wisconsin it has been held that a constitutional requirement that all writs of process should run in the name of the state included only process emanating from the courts of justice of the state. Sprague v. Birchard, 1 Wis. 457.

Divisions.—The original division of process was into original, mesne, and final: original process being the original writ commanding the party to appear and defend; mesne process embracing all writs and orders of the court necessary for the carrying on of the suit; while final process comprehended those writs which were necessary to secure to the successful party the benefit of the suit. It is now generally understood, however, that all writs preceding execution are embraced within the term "mesne process," which is therefore used to describe any except final process. Ferguson v. State, 31 N. J. L. 291; Arnold v. Chapman, 13 R. I. 586. See also the various titles which treat of different process, e. g., ATTACHMENT, vol. 3, p. 181; EXECUTIONS, vol. 11, p. 604; SUBPENA; WRITS.

Affidavit.—In Blumauer-Frank Drug Co. v. Branstetter, (Idaho 1895) 43 Pac. Rep. 575, it was held that an affidavit and notice for the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage were process.

Alias Process. (See also ALIAS WRIT, vol. 2, p. 52.)—Process includes alias process. Wheeling Gas Co. v. Wheeling, 7 W. Va. 24.

Attachment.—In Carey v. German American Ins. Co., 84 Wis. 85, a writ of attachment was held to be process.

Bankruptcy.—Proceedings in bankruptcy have been held not to be legal process as that term was used in a fire-insurance policy providing against a change in the title to the property by legal process. Perry v. Lorillard F. Ins. Co., 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 204.

So a petition in bankruptcy has been held not to be process. Ex p. Walker, 6 De G. M. & G. 752; Ex p. Treherne, 2 De G. F. & J. 661; Ex p. Hills, 3 De G. & J. 476, note. And in Re Kerr, 1 L. R. 1r. 67, it was held that an adjudication in bankruptcy was not process.

Clerk.—Process ordinarily means process issued by the clerk, which constitutes part of the record. Brown v. Harris, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 388.

Color of Process.—In Barfield v. Turner, 101 N. Car. 357, it was held that the term "color of process" meant process sufficient in form and apparently valid.

Commitments.—An Act of Congress allowed mileage of six cents a mile to an officer serving "any process, warrant, attachment, or other writ, including writs of subpoena in civil or criminal cases." In construing this statute in U. S. v. Tanner, 147 U. S. 663, the court said: "The word process, as used in that phrase "due process of law," as used in the various constitutions, means the clause, evidently refers to process for bringing persons or property within the jurisdiction of the court, and not to warrants of commitment by virtue of which criminals are transported from the court to the place of commitment."

But in Anderson v. Vanstone, 14 Can. L. T. 469, it was held that an order by a judge of the County Court in chambers for a commitment to close custody of a party to an action in that court, for default of attendance to be re-examined as a judgment debtor, pursuant to a former order, was process.

Mittimus.—In Palmer v. Allen, 5 Day (Conn.) 199, it was held that a mittimus is process.

Distress.—A distress warrant is not legal process. U. S. v. Myers, 14 Int. Rev. Rec. 14, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,847.

So a distress for rent has been held not to be an execution or legal process. Ex p. Birmingham, etc., Gas-Light Co., L. R. 11 Eq. 615; Ex p. Harrison, 13 Q. B. D. 760; Rex v. Crisp, 1 B. & Ald. 287.

Execution.—The term process includes execution. Breitenbach v. Bush, 44 Pa. St. 320.

All the steps taken in an execution with seizure and sale are, in the natural meaning of the word, comprehended in the term process. Re Delahoyd, 11 Ir. Ch. 407.

A Kentucky statute provided that every process in the action should be directed to the sheriff of the county. It was held that the term process included an execution. Johnson v. Elkins, 90 Ky. 163; Gowdry v. Sanders, 88 Ky. 347.

Fee-bill.—It has been held that a fee-bill is process and must run in the name of the state. Reddick v. Cloud, 7 Ill. 670.

Garnishment.—Garnishment has been held not to be a suit or process. Tunstall v. Worthington, Hempst. (U. S.) 662.

But notice to a garnishee is process within the meaning of the statutes and constitutional provisions prescribing the manner and style in which process shall issue. Middleton Paper Co. v. Rock River Paper Co., 19 Fed. Rep. 252; Boyd v. Chesapeake, etc., Canal Co., 17 Md. 195; Hinkley v. St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co., 9 Minn. 55.

In Wile v. Cohn, 63 Fed. Rep. 759, affirmed (C. C. A.) 70 Fed. Rep. 138, on the other hand, it was held that notice to a garnishee of the garnishment was not process. See also the title GARNISHMENT, vol. 14, p. 731.

Information.—In Davenport v. Bird, 34 Iowa 527, it was held that an information filed before a police magistrate, accusing an individual of the violation of a city ordinance, was not process.

Judicial Sales.—In Parke v. Bryant, (Ala. 1902) 31 So. Rep. 593, it was said: "Decrees of sale are not process, and moneys received by the register merely as the custodian of sale proceeds belonging in court are not moneys collected under process."

Mandamus.—Process includes mandamus. Wheeling Gas Co. v. Wheeling, 7 W. Va. 24.

Memorial.—In Ex p. Davis, 41 Me. 38, a justice of the Supreme Court who had been removed by the governor in a manner alleged to be unconstitutional filed a memorial to the court asking for judgment of the court thereon, and claiming the right to sit as a justice of the court. It was held, however, that the memorial so filed was no process known to the common law, since no party adversely interested or otherwise had been summoned or claimed to be heard, and therefore it did not bring the proceedings of the removal before the court in such a manner as to give jurisdiction thereto.

Notice. (See also infra, this note, Summons.)—In Horton v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 26 Mo. App. 349, it was held that the notice required by statute in the case of an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace was not process in a legal sense.

In Dorman v. Bayley, 10 Minn. 383, it was held that none of the appeal papers in an appeal from the judgment of a justice was a "writ or other process" requiring a stamp under the Internal Revenue Law of 1864, schedule B.

In Nichols v. Burlington, etc., Plank Road Co., 4 Greene (Iowa) 42, notice was held not to be process.

A mere notice, though headed with the name of a County Court, is not a process within 9 & 10 Vict., c. 95, § 57; R. v. Castle, 30 L. T. N. S. 188; but such a notice, especially if it also has the royal arms and (without authority) professes to bear the signature of the register, is a "false color or pretense" of such process. Reg. v. Evans, Dears. & B. 236, 26 L. J. M. C. 92; R. v. Richmond, 28 L. J. M. C. 188.

But in Schwed v. Hartwitz, 23 Colo. 188, it was held that the publication of the notice of a tax sale was in the nature of service of process.

An Iowa statute provided that the process of the City Court of Dubuque might be served by the marshal of that city or by any sheriff. It was held that the word process thus used included original notice in actions commenced in the Dubuque City Court. Tully v. Beau-bien, 10 Iowa 187.

In Field v. Park, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 141, it was held that notices on which rules were made were process.

In Wilson v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 108 Mo. 599, notice was held to be process.

Same — Process Must Emanate from Court.—In Healey v. Blake Mfg. Co., (Mass. 1902) 62 N. E. Rep. 271, it was said: "'Lawful process in any action or proceeding' manifestly refers to process emanating from court, or by the authority of a court, and cannot be understood to refer to such acts or notices in pais between private parties as derive no authority from a court, but simply serve to create a right of action. Bouv. Law Dict., tits. 'Process,' 'Proceeding'; Pub. Stat., glossary, 'Process.'"

Same. — A Guardian's Notice of an application to sell his ward's land has been held to stand in the place and to perform the office of process. Nichols v. Mitchell, 70 Ill. 258.

Same — Depositions.—In Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Sage, 49 Kan. 524, it was held that notice to take depositions was not process.

Same — Attorney's Lien.—In Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Thacher, 17 Kan. 92, it was held that the service of notice of an attorney's lien was not a service of process.

due course of legal proceedings according to those rules and forms which have Same — Garnishment. — See supra, this note, Garnishment.

Order of Sale. — In Sauer v. Steinbauer, 14 Wis. 70, it was held that an order of court directing the sale of the property of a judgment debtor was legal process.

Ordinance Authorizing Construction of Sewer. — In Dumars v. Denver, (Colo. App. 1901) 65 Pac. Rep. 588, upon the question whether an ordinance authorizing the construction of a sewer was process, Wilson, P. J., said: "It would seem, therefore, to be essential, in order to constitute process, that the notice be of something proposed, against which the party notified might have the opportunity to appear or to defend himself or his property. That the ordinance in question was not of such a character or nature seems to me apparent. It was not the preliminary act in the matter of providing for the construction of the sewer, but was simply one of the intermediate acts required by the charter in making provision for the improvement. It required nothing of the citizen; there was nothing in it against which he could defend, so far as the city council was concerned." Compare Hastings v. Columbus, 42 Ohio St. 586.

Prohibition. — Process includes prohibition. Wheeling Gas Co. v. Wheeling, 7 W. Va. 24.

Receiver. — In In re Pope, 17 Q. B. D. 743, an order for the appointment of a receiver was held to be a process of execution within an English statute providing that where land had been actually delivered in execution by writ of elegit or other lawful authority, it should be unnecessary to register the judgment, writ, or other process of execution.

Recognizance. — In U. S. v. Murphy, 82 Fed. Rep. 893, it was held that a recognizance to answer in a criminal cause was process.

Recording, Indexing, Etc. — In Louisiana process is held to signify the judicial means or the writ which issues forth to bring the defendant into court to answer. It does not include furnishing copies of indictments, recording and indexing court papers, and the like. Fitzpatrick v. New Orleans, 27 La. Ann. 457.

Rule to Show Cause. — A rule to show cause has been held not to be a writ or process within Stat. Mass. 1782, c. 9, § 3, requiring writs and processes to have a teste, and to be under the seal of the court. Taylor v. Henry, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 397.

But a rule upon an incumbent to show cause why he refuses to surrender his office is process. Kennard v. Louisiana, 92 U. S. 480.

A rule nisi is also held to be judicial process. Falvey v. Jones, 80 Ga. 130.

Rule to Commit. — The word process usually signifies a writ or warrant, but it also means all the proceedings in a cause after the first step (Tomlins's Dict.), and comprehends a rule or order to commit. People v. Nevins, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 169.

Scire Facias. — In Drexel v. Miller, 49 Pa. St. 246, a scire facias upon a mortgage was held to be process within the meaning of Act Pa., April 18, 1861, staying civil process against any person in the service of the state or of the United States for the term of such service and thirty days thereafter.

So a scire facias to hear error is process. Weiskoph v. Dibble, 18 Fla. 22. See also Wheeling Gas Co. v. Wheeling, 7 W. Va. 24.

Sequestration. — A writ of sequestration is process. Re Browne, 40 Bank. L. J. 46; Ex p. Hughes, L. R. 12 Eq. 137.

Signature. — In Brown v. Way, 33 Ga. 192, it was said: "The mandate, without the authenticating signature, is no more process than would be the signature without the preceding mandate."

Summons. (See also supra, this note, Notice.) — The question as to whether a mere writ of summons is process has often arisen. It has been held in Minnesota that the term process did not include a mere summons, process being considered as nearly synonymous with "proceedings." Hanna v. Russell, 12 Minn. 80.

But in Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118, summons was held to be process.

In Brooks v. Nevada Nickel Syndicate, 24 Nev. 311, it was held that a summons was not process within the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring the style of all process to run in the name of the state.

So in Colorado, Florida, Oregon, South Carolina, Wisconsin, and the federal courts, a summons has been held not to be process. Chamberlain v. Measing, 47 Fed. Rep. 435; Comet Consol. Min. Co. v. Frost, 15 Colo. 313; Gilmer v. Bird, 15 Fla. 421; Bailey v. Williams, 6 Oregon 71; Genobles v. West, 23 S. Car. 154; Porter v. Vandercook, 11 Wis. 70. See also Dwight v. Merritt, 18 Blatchf. (U. S.) 305. In all these cases the summons was merely a writing directed to the defendant requiring him to appear and answer the complaint, and was signed only by the plaintiff's attorney. It was not a mandate of the court to its officer commanding him to summon, nor did it bear the signature of the clerk nor the seal of the court. And see Whitney v. Blackburn, 17 Oregon 564, 11 Am. St. Rep. 857.

That summons is process, see Horton v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 26 Mo. App. 355; McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 2 S. Dak. 383.

In In re Dobson, 8 Ir. Ch. 391, it was held that a trade debtor's summons was process.

Same — Summons in Unlawful Detainer Held to Be Process. — Wheeling Gas Co. v. Wheeling, 7 W. Va. 24.

Same — Summons from Justice's Court. — In Hyfield v. Sims, 90 Ga. 809, it was held that the term process included a summons from a justice's court, as well as process attached to the declaration by the clerk in a case brought in the Superior Court.

Supplemental Proceedings Held to Be Process. — Wolf v. McKinley, 65 Minn. 156.

Void and Irregular Process Distinguished. — See Phillips v. Biron, 1 Stra. 509; Bergman v. Noble, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 136. And see IRREGULAR — IRREGULARITY, vol. 17, p. 482, note.

Witnesses. — In Matter of Lewellen, 104 Mich. 318, it was held that persons detained as witnesses were held upon civil process, as that term was used in a Michigan statute providing that persons arrested on civil process been established for the protection of private rights. It is not necessarily judicial process only.¹

PROCESS BUTTER. — See note 2.

PROCESS (PATENT LAW). — See the title PATENTS, vol. 22, p. 260.

PROCESS FOR FORCING WATER. — See note 3.

PROCESSIONING. — See note 4.

PROCES-VERBAL. — A "proces-verbal" is a true relation in writing, in due form of law, of what has been done and said verbally in the presence of a public officer, and what he himself does upon the occasion. It is a species of inquisition of office.⁵

PROCHEIN AMI. (See also the title NEXT FRIEND, 14 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 996.) — A prochein ami is one admitted by the court to prosecute for the infant because otherwise he might be prejudiced by the refusal or neglect of his guardian.⁶

PROCLAMATION. — A proclamation is defined as the act of causing some state matters to be published or made generally known; a written or printed document in which are contained such matters, issued by proper authority.⁷

PRO CONFESSO. (See also the title DECREES, 5 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 946.) — To take a bill pro confesso is to order it to stand as if its statements were confessed to be true, and a decree pro confesso is a decree based on such statements, assumed to be true.⁸

PROCURE. — To procure means to contrive; to bring about; to effect; to should be kept in rooms separate and distinct from those in which prisoners were detained.

Writ. — In Horton v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 26 Mo. App. 355, it was said that process is used as "a generic term for writs of the class called judicial."

In Carey v. German American Ins. Co., 84 Wis. 85, it was said: "A writ is process and a process is a writ, interchangeably."

Process usually signifies a writ or warrant. Perry v. Lorillard F. Ins. Co., 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 204; People v. Nevins, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 154.

But in Blackamore's Case, 8 Coke 157, it was said: "This statute doth not extend to an original writ, nor to the writ which is in the nature of an original, for the same is not included within this word process."

Writ of Error as Process. — See Cleveland Ins. Co. v. Globe Ins. Co., 98 U. S. 366.

1. Due Process of Law. — See the title DUE PROCESS OF LAW, vol. 10, pp. 293, 294, and see Weimer v. Bunbury, 30 Mich. 201; Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 209.

2. Process Butter. — See Hathaway v. McDonald, (Wash. 1902) 68 Pac. Rep. 379. See generally the title ADULTERATION, vol. 1, p. 738.

3. Process for Forcing Water. — A grantor in a deed reserved to himself and his heirs the right to use a supply of spring water by means of a hydraulic ram, wheel, or "other process of forcing water." It was held that "other process" included a windmill. Richardson v. Clements, 89 Pa. St. 503, 33 Am. Rep. 784.

4. ProceSSIONING. — "ProceSSIONING was designed to prevent controversies concerning the boundaries of land between adjacent owners, and originally they were required, once in every ten years, to have their lands 'proceSSIONED or gone around, and the landmarks renewed.' It is, however, now confined to cases where the owner of any particular land desires the lines around his entire tract surveyed and marked anew. And an examination of the law of proceSSIONING will show that there is no provision for any other manner of tracing and marking the lines of adjacent owners, so as to make the said lines prima facie correct and admissible in evidence without further proof." Watson v. Bishop, 69 Ga. 53.

5. Proces-verbal. — Bouv. L. Dict. See also Hall v. Hall, 11 Tex. 539.

6. Prochein Ami. — Isaacs v. Boyd, 5 Port. (Ala.) 393; Raming v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., (Mo. 1899) 50 S. W. Rep. 793. See also Thomas v. Safe Deposit, etc., Co., 73 Md. 451; Bulow v. Witte, 3 S. Car. 322; Mitchell v. Connolly, 1 Bailey L. (S. Car.) 205.

7. Proclamation. — Bouv. L. Dict., quoted in Atty.-Gen. v. Ryan, 5 Manitoba 92.

In Lapeyre v. U. S., 17 Wall. (U. S.) 195, it is said: "In the English law the instrument is thus defined: Proclamation — proclamation — is a notice publicly given of anything whereof the King thinks fit to advertise his subjects;" and in the same case it was held that publication in a newspaper was not necessary to make the proclamation of the President operative.

Time of Taking Effect. — See Lapeyre v. U. S., 17 Wall. (U. S.) 201. And see the title STATUTES.

"A Proclamation by the President, Reserving Lands from Sale, is his official public announcement of an order to that effect. No particular form of such an announcement is necessary. It is sufficient if it has such publicity as accomplishes the end to be attained." Wolsey v. Chapman, 101 U. S. 770. See also the titles PRESIDENT OF UNITED STATES, vol. 22, p. 1229; STATUTES.

8. Pro Confesso. — Thomson v. Wooster, 114 U. S. 111. A carefully prepared history of the practice and effect of taking bills pro confesso is given in Williams v. Corwin, Hopk. (N. Y.) 471, by Hoffman, master, in a report made to Chancellor Sandford, of New York.

cause; ¹ to acquire for one's self.²

PRODUCE, PRODUCTS, ETC.—See note 4.

1. Procure.—Long v. State, 23 Neb. 45; Marcus v. Bernstein, 117 N. Car. 31. And in the latter case it was said that to procure imported action.

2. Sisk v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 16 Ind. App. 565.

Bankruptcy—Procure and Suffer.—In In re Ogles, 93 Fed. Rep. 434, it was said: “It was decided by the Supreme Court in the case of Wilson v. City Bank, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 473, under the bankruptcy statute of 1867, which was more liberal to creditors and comprehensive on this subject than the bankruptcy statute of 1898, that the mere passive nonresistance by an insolvent debtor to the suit brought was not sufficient to establish the fact that he had procured or ‘suffered’ his property to be taken on legal process.”

There is a clearly recognized legal distinction between procuring an act to be done and suffering it to be done. Matter of Black, 2 Ben. (U. S.) 204.

Illicit Intercourse.—Procure, as used in the California statute making it an offense to “procure a female to have illicit carnal connection with any man,” does not cover the offense of seduction. The natural meaning of the word procure is that the illicit intercourse is with a person other than the one who commits the offense of procuring, etc. People v. Roderigas, 49 Cal. 11.

Procuring Cause—Real-estate Broker. (See also the title REAL-ESTATE BROKERS, post.)—In Ware v. Dos Passos, 4 N. Y. App. Div. 32, it was held that the plaintiff might devote time, labor, and money to the interests of the owner seeking to sell his property, might call attention to the property, might bring people together who might not have met otherwise, and might create impressions which under later and more favorable circumstances might assist in the consummation of a sale, and yet not be entitled to commissions, for the reason that he was not the procuring cause of the sale. Compare Smith v. McGovern, 65 N. Y. 574; Garding v. Haskin, 141 N. Y. 514.

Upon a written request by an owner of freehold property to a real-estate agent to procure a purchaser for it and to advertise it at a certain place, it was held that the agent had no authority to enter into an open contract for sale, and semble, that he had no authority to enter into any contract for sale. Hamer v. Sharp, L. R. 19 Eq. 108.

Procuring Pistol.—In Reg. v. Mines, 25 Ont. 577, it was held that a conviction for procuring a pistol with intent unlawfully to do injury to another person was not a sufficient conviction for “having on his person a pistol,” and was bad as not disclosing an offense known to law. The court said: “The term used in the commitment, procure, does not mean, or may not mean, personal use and handling of the weapon; had it been said that ‘he did procure and have in his hand (or upon his person),’ then the offense would be well defined.”

3. Procurement.—Wiley v. State, 52 Ind. 251, quoting Webst. Dict. And in that case it was held that in an indictment for attempting to procure an abortion, an averment that the procurement of the miscarriage was not necessary to preserve the life of the woman was equivalent to an averment that the miscarriage was not necessary to preserve her life.

4. Produce—Butter, Eggs, Meat.—Within the meaning of a statute which provided that every person engaged in buying and selling “produce, fish, meats, and fruits” should be regarded as a produce dealer, and that no additional license should be required from produce dealers for selling meat, it was held that butter and eggs were produce, but that one who sells meat alone is not a produce dealer. District of Columbia v. Oyster, 4 Mackey (D. C.) 285.

Wood and Timber.—In Ladd v. Abel, 18 Conn. 513, in construing a covenant in which A agreed to furnish B with “one-half of all the produce” of a farm, and further, if “one-half of the yearly rent and produce” should be insufficient for B's support, agreed to increase the supplies, it was held that “yearly produce” did not comprehend the wood and timber of the farm, but must be confined to crops annually gathered.

The Produce of Capital Employed in Trade is all that the capital produces, whether in the shape of interest or profits allowed. Johnston v. Moore, 4 Jur. N. S. 356, 27 L. J. Ch. 453. See also Howe v. Dartmouth, 7 Ves. Jr. 137.

Principal.—In a will, a bequest of the produce of a fund, directly, or in trust without any limitation as to continuance, will carry the principal. Craft v. Snook, 13 N. J. Eq. 121. See also Peale v. White, 7 La. Ann. 449; Arnauld v. Delachaise, 4 La. Ann. 109.

A Charter-party contained an agreement to ship at A “a full and complete cargo of produce.” It was held that the term produce meant “any article of commerce which was usually shipped from the loading port.” Per Maule, J., in Warren v. Peabody, 8 C. B. 808, 65 E. C. L. 808.

Coke.—Coke has been held to be produce within the meaning of a reservation of a right of way for conveying the produce of mines. Bowes v. Ravensworth, 15 C. B. 523, 80 E. C. L. 523.

Product—Live Stock—Meat.—In State v. Spaugh, 129 N. Car. 564, it was held that the term products, in an act exempting farmers from a license tax, included live stock and fresh meat.

Forest Products.—Standing, growing trees are not “forest products.” Fletcher v. Alcona Tp., 72 Mich. 18.

Spirits.—An exception to a license law permitted persons to sell wines and liquors, the products of their own farms. It was held that spirits manufactured from the grain received by a miller as tolls are not from the “products of his own farm.” State v. Kennerly, 98 N. Car. 657.

PRODUCE BROKER. — See note 1.

PRODUCE EXCHANGE. — See the title STOCK AND PRODUCE EXCHANGE.

PRODUCER. — See note 2.

PRODUCTION. — The word "production" has reference to that which is produced or made; product; fruit of labor; as, the productions of the earth, comprehending all vegetables and fruits; the productions of intellect or genius, as poems and prose compositions; the products of art, as manufactures of every kind.³

Product of Agriculture — Flour. — Under a charter of a corporation authorizing it to deal in agricultural products, it was held that the corporation was not authorized to go upon the market and purchase flour. Getty v. C. R. Barnes Milling Co., 40 Kan. 284.

Pork Packers. — In Morningstar v. Cunningham, 110 Ind. 328, 59 Am. Rep. 211, it was held that evidence was admissible to show a usage among pork packers not to keep the product of each customer's hogs separate, also to retain certain portions of the hogs as compensation; and also to show that the term product had a known peculiar meaning, and did not include those portions of the hogs so retained. See also Stewart v. Smith, 28 Ill. 397. And see generally the title USAGES AND CUSTOMS.

Producing. — In Mighell v. Dougherty, 86 Iowa 485, it was said that producing means "'giving being or form to; 'manufacturing; 'making; and 'procuring' means 'bringing into possession; 'obtaining.'" Quoting Webst. Dict.

Produced and Published Distinguished. — In Hanfstaengl v. American Tobacco Co., (1895) 1 Q. B. 352, in construing a copyright act, Esher, M. R., said: "The word produced is more general than the word 'published' used in the convention, and there are works mentioned in the act which would not be touched under the word 'published,' and the more general word is therefore used."

1. Produce Broker. — In U. S. v. Simons, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 470, the term produce broker, as used in an internal revenue law, was held to include a person who sold produce in the public market, although such produce was raised by him upon his own farm. See generally the title FACTORS OR COMMISSION MERCHANTS, vol. 12, p. 625.

2. Producer. — The term producer may apply to one who produces manufactured articles or products of the farm. Warren v. Buck, 71 Vt. 44; Beals v. Olmstead, 24 Vt. 114.

Producer Used as Equivalent to Manufacturer. — Hancock v. State, 114 Ga. 439. See MANUFACTURE — MANUFACTURER — MANUFACTURING, ETC., vol. 19, p. 922.

3. Production. — Webst. Dict., quoted in Dano v. Mississippi, etc., R. Co., 27 Ark. 567.

I. PUBLIC DOCUMENTS — 1. In General. — Public documents have been defined as consisting of the acts of public functionaries in the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of government, including those transactions which official persons are required to enter in books or registers in the course of their public duties and which occur within the circle of their own personal knowledge and observation. They have been subdivided into judicial documents and those which are not judicial.¹ It may be stated as a general rule, applicable to all writings of a public nature, that if their contents would, in the opinion of the court, or of the chief magistrate, or of the head of the department under whose control the documents are kept, be detrimental to public interest, an inspection will not be granted.²

2. Judicial Writings. — From a very early period it has been admitted that every one has a right, upon paying the proper fees, to have the records of the public courts produced for him to inspect and copy.³ In England, while it is doubted whether in theory all persons without distinction have the legal right to inspect the records of inferior tribunals, these records are, in practice, open to the public without restriction.⁴ In the reign of Charles II. this right was, in consequence of frequent applications for a copy of the record on which to base actions for malicious prosecution, restricted by refusing to grant a copy of an indictment for felony save upon motion in open court.¹ The right to a copy of the record was never questioned, however, in cases of misdemeanor.² In the United States the right to have a copy of the record seems never to have been restrained.³ This right of inspection applies also to writs and other papers in a cause; and if the officer having custody of them refuses to produce them for inspection, he may be compelled, by rule of court, to do so, even where the object is to procure evidence to be used in a civil action against himself.⁴

3. 3 Coke, p. iv.

By 46 Edw. III. the right to the inspection of judicial records was extended to cases arising between the sovereign and the subject. 3 Coke, p. iv.

3. Nonjudicial Writings. — The right to inspect nonjudicial public documents, among which are included acts of state,⁵ legislative acts and journals, laws of other states, official registers,⁶ and books of public officers,⁷ is limited to cases where they constitute the common evidence of transactions between public officers and private individuals, and where the inspection is necessary to establish some disputed claim.⁸ There is not the same general right of inspection of documents of this nature as there is of public judicial writings, but it is limited to those persons interested in the subject-matter.⁹ It is not necessary that the interest should be private, capable of sustaining a suit or defense on the personal behalf of the party desiring the inspection, but he has the right of inspection whenever, by reason of his relation to the common interest, he may act in such a suit as a representative of a common or public right.¹⁰ Where the purpose for which the inspection is sought is a purely private matter and not connected with the purposes for which the books are kept, no right of inspection exists.¹¹ Where an action is pending the court will at any stage of the cause award a rule for the production of the documents,¹² but where there is no action mandamus will be granted to compel the production.¹³

4. Semi-public Documents — a. IN GENERAL. — There are certain documents considered as public with respect to a particular class of society because they proceed from an authority which it recognizes, but with respect to the rest of the community they may be nothing more than private documents. In England this includes court rolls, customaries of manors, public lottery tickets, parish books, and books of corporations. In the United States the only documents of this nature seem to be books of private corporations.¹⁴

b. BOOKS OF CORPORATIONS — (1) Inspection by Stranger. — As regards the inspection of the books of a public or private corporation by a stranger, the same rules obtain as if the books were those of an individual.¹

(2) Inspection by Stockholders. — The right of a stockholder to inspect the books of his corporation will be treated elsewhere in this work.²

II. PRIVATE DOCUMENTS — 1. In General — a. AT COMMON LAW. — Under the earlier practice the common law refused to compel either party to assist the other in the conduct of his case. The only recourse was a bill in equity for a discovery.³ Subsequently, however, a less stringent practice was gradually substituted, and the courts would compel either party to produce for the inspection of the adverse party a document in his possession or control material to the latter's case, and in which the parties had a joint interest,⁴ or where the document was held by the party moved against as a trustee or agent for the applicant,⁵ one party being, in this connection, deemed to hold as a trustee for the other, when it was shown that such other had an interest in the document sought.⁶ Production was not compelled, however, where the document had been interchangeably executed.⁷ In case the document sought was the instrument declared on, an inspection in the nature of oyer was also allowed.⁸

b. UNDER STATUTORY PROVISIONS. — The common-law right of inspection has been further enlarged by statutes authorizing the court, in its discretion,⁹ to compel a party to a pending action or other legal proceeding to allow his opponent an inspection with the right to make copies of all documents in his possession relating to the pending cause.¹ The right of production and inspection given by the statute is generally coextensive with that given by the principles and practice of chancery in cases where relief was sought by a bill of discovery, being intended to provide a speedier and more convenient substitute for such a bill.² This power having been exercised by the courts of common law before statutes were enacted, the statutes in regard thereto are to be considered as declaratory rather than creative of the jurisdiction in this respect.³

Not Matter of Right. — This inspection is granted, as has been stated, in the discretion of the court,⁴ and is not a matter of right,⁵ but is granted in extreme cases where the refusal may defeat justice or seriously imperil the establishment of a claim or defense.⁶

2. Where Parties Have Joint Interest in Document. — The court, in behalf of a party to an action, may compel such party's adversary to produce any documents that he may have in his possession to which such party has an exclusive right or a right in common with his adversary, if it appears that such document is material to the maintenance of his contested rights.⁷

Rhode Island. — Arnold v. Pawtuxet Valley Water Co., 18 R. I. 189.

The Rule Laid Down by Lord Mansfield was that whenever the party would be entitled to a discovery in equity he should have it at law. Barry v. Alexander, cited in 1 Tidd's Pr. 592. This principle has also been laid down in New York. Wallis v. Murray, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 399.

3. Actions Between Principal and Agent. — As a general rule, in actions between principal and agent either party is entitled to the production and inspection of all books, papers, and documents relating to the business.¹ This is true even though one party alleges an agreement on the part of the other party not to demand an inspection.²

4. Actions Between Partners — a. IN GENERAL. — In the case of partnership books and papers in the hands of one of the partners or his assignees or representatives, where both parties have an equal right to the examination and inspection thereof for the purposes of the suit, it is the constant and uniform practice of the court, upon the application of either party, and in any stage of the suit, to order the production of the books and papers belonging equally to both for the inspection of the adverse party and the taking of copies thereof.³

Rights of Heirs and Devisees. — The right of inspection extends also to the heirs and devisees of a deceased partner.⁴ The application must, however, be made in good faith.⁵

b. TO WHOM APPLICABLE. — This right extends to every person having a direct interest in the business, whether his relation is that of a partner, or a principal bringing business to the firm, or an employee entitled to a share of the profits, or a coworker with a partnership in the general business, as long as he is entitled to a portion of the profits of the common venture.⁶ The partner's right of inspection is not affected by the fact that opportunity has previously been given to him to examine the books;⁷ but where it appears that the party moved against offers to allow the applicant to examine the books, and this offer has been refused on account of relations between the parties and their counsel, the court will not aid in securing a further examination.⁸

c. BOOKS IN FOREIGN STATE. — The order for inspection will be granted even though the books of which inspection is desired are in a foreign state.⁹

d. EFFECT OF DISSOLUTION OF PARTNERSHIP. — That a partnership is dissolved does not affect the right to an inspection of the partnership books, the courts recognizing the right of a former partner to have access to the books at all reasonable times.¹⁰

e. SALE OF PARTNERSHIP INTEREST. — Where the interest of a deceased partner has been sold and suit is brought by the executors,¹ heirs,² or devisees³ to set aside the transfer on the ground of fraud, an order allowing them to inspect the partnership books is properly granted, even before the fraud has been established.⁴ It has been held, however, that where a partner had, during his lifetime, sold his interest, his executors could not, in an action to set aside the conveyance as fraudulent, claim a general inspection of the books while the sale stood.⁵

5. Where Forgery Is Alleged. — Where it is claimed that the document of which inspection is sought is forged, the application for inspection will generally be granted.⁶

6. Against Whom Allowed — a. IN GENERAL. — It is well settled that the order of production will be granted only as against the adverse party, and that the court will not compel a third person not interested in the suit to produce a private paper of his own for inspection;⁷ but such a person may be compelled to produce in court any documents in his possession to which the applicant has an exclusive right or a right in common with another.⁸

The Real Party in Interest may be compelled to produce a document, even though he is not nominally a party.⁹

Nominal Party. — Conversely, the court has no power to compel one who is merely a nominal party to produce his documents.¹⁰

Interest of Third Persons as Affecting. — In England and Canada production will not be compelled where a third person who is not a party to the action has an interest in the documents of which production is sought,¹¹ unless the court can see that the party having the legal custody sufficiently represents the other party's interest.¹² Similarly, a joint agent of the defendant and others not parties to the cause cannot be compelled to produce documents held by him for the defendant and such third parties.¹³

b. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS. — The production of the books in the hands of an executor¹ or administrator² may also be compelled.

c. ASSIGNEE FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS. — In an action to set aside an assignment for the benefit of creditors as fraudulent, the assignee may be ordered, on a proper showing, to produce the books of his assignor for the inspection of the adverse party.³

d. COPLAINTIFF OR CODEFENDANT. — A plaintiff or defendant will be allowed an order of production and inspection as against a coplaintiff or codefendant where there are rights to be adjusted between them to which the inspection is material and where the right to the inspection depends upon the community of interest between the parties.⁴ But the inspection will not be allowed where it is sought in an independent matter not connected with the action in which they are joined.⁵

e. OFFICERS OF CORPORATION. — Where the corporation is not a party to the action, its officers and agents cannot be compelled to produce in their individual capacities books of the corporation over which they have not the absolute control and right of disposition at their own discretion.⁶ This is true although the corporation whose books are sought is alleged to be a sham.⁷ Even where the corporation is a party, its officers and agents cannot in that capacity be compelled to produce its books unless it is shown that the books are in their custody or control.⁸

f. RECEIVERS. — The stockholders of a corporation are entitled to an order allowing them to inspect the books of the corporation, though it is in the hands of a receiver.⁹ Nor is the fact that a receiver has been appointed sufficient ground for denying to the adverse party in a suit against the corporation an order for the production and inspection of the corporate books if the receiver has not actually taken possession of the books.¹⁰ It has also been held that in an action against the security on a note given by a company, who was also receiver for the company, the defendant could be compelled to produce for inspection books and documents of the company which were in his absolute control.¹

g. SHERIFF. — That the books of which inspection is sought are in the hands of the sheriff under attachment levied at the instance of the applicant is no ground for refusing an order of production and inspection.²

7. Purposes for Which Allowed — a. To Aid in Framing Pleadings. — To determine whether an order of production and inspection will be granted to aid the applicant in framing his pleadings, reference must be had to the statutes.³ By rules of court adopted in some jurisdictions, express provision has been made for the production of documents of which an inspection is necessary to enable a party to frame his declaration or complaint,⁴ answer,⁵ counterclaim,⁶ or reply.⁷

To Aid in Furnishing Bill of Particulars. — It is within the power of the court, in the proper exercise of its discretion, to order the production and inspection to enable a party to furnish a required bill of particulars. The order should be made only in cases of necessity and where the application has been made in good faith for a legitimate purpose.⁸

b. To Aid in Preparation for Trial — (1) In General. — Under the statutes it is generally held that the order will be granted to enable the applicant to prepare for trial,⁹ to aid him in proving either his cause of action¹⁰ the applicant does not show that he has a cause of action,¹ or a defense,² the court will not grant the order.

(2) Materiality — (a) In General. — While the materiality is not required to be shown absolutely,³ facts and circumstances sufficient to warrant a presumption of materiality must be shown,⁴ mere belief on the applicant's part that the evidence will tend to prove his case being insufficient.⁵

(b) How Shown. — To this end the applicant must show the particular information which is required⁶ and that there are entries in the documents sought as to the matter in regard to which the inspection is denied,⁷ or give other facts sufficient to satisfy the court that material evidence is contained in the document.⁸

(3) Necessity — (a) In General. — The necessity which must be shown is not the general necessity that exists for getting relevant testimony, but is a necessity peculiar to the case of getting information in this particular manner. This kind of necessity does not exist when it is probable that the information can be had by the usual and ordinary methods.⁹

(b) How Shown. — The same showing of the necessity of the production is required as of the materiality of the evidence sought, and facts and circumstances must be stated to show how and why the necessity exists.¹ Thus, the order will not be granted where it appears that the applicant is sufficiently informed of the facts to enable him to present his case,² or to frame his reply or answer to any pleading of his adversary without an inspection of the document,³ or where it appears that he already possesses the information contained in the document sought.⁴ Nor will an order be granted where its only purpose is to prevent the applicant from answering untruthfully.⁵ It is not sufficient that the paper may, or even probably will, furnish information to obtain evidence which may be material, but the paper itself must contain the evidence, either by itself or in connection with other proof.⁶ Nor will the production be ordered where it appears that the documents contain merely hearsay evidence which neither party could use as evidence on the trial,⁷ nor where it appears that the production sought is not indispensably necessary, but is simply a precautionary measure.⁸

To Discover Parties. — Where the purpose for which the order of discovery is sought is merely to enable the applicant to ascertain who are the proper persons to be made parties defendant, the order will not be granted.⁹

To State Amount of Damages. — The order will not be granted where the purpose for which it is sought is to enable the plaintiff to state with accuracy in his complaint the amount of damages claimed.¹⁰

(4) Demand. — Ordinarily the court will not grant an order for inspection in the absence of proof that the applicant has made a demand for such inspection and it has been refused,¹¹ but where the court has made an order for the

e. LACHES. — An unreasonable delay in making an application for the production of the documents is sufficient ground for denying the application;² but where, in spite of the delay, there is still a reasonable time in which the books may be produced,³ or where it is caused by the act of the party of whom production is sought,⁴ there is not such laches as to cause a denial of the order.

f. INCONVENIENCE. — The mere fact that producing and depositing the books for inspection will subject the party required to do so to great annoyance and inconvenience is not alone sufficient ground for refusing the order.⁵ But it has been held that where the production of the books would be attended with great inconvenience and copies of the pertinent matters will serve the purposes of the applicant, the production of such copies instead of the original will be allowed.⁶ Thus, a foreign corporation will not be compelled to produce books in use in its office in a foreign state, but will be allowed to produce sworn copies of the contents of the books relating to the subject-matter mentioned in the order.⁷ So, too, where it is evident that there is no absolute right on the part of the applicant to have an inspection, and that such an inspection would be a great hardship as to the person moved against if the applicant's case should fail, an order will not be granted unless it is absolutely necessary.⁸

g. INCRIMINATING DOCUMENTS. — The right of a person to refuse to produce documents which will incriminate him or render him liable to penalties or forfeitures will be treated elsewhere.⁹

h. PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS. — The freedom from production of certain classes of documents is fully treated elsewhere in this work.¹⁰

10. Inspection. — The court will not remove the document from the possession of the party moved against and deliver it to the applicant,¹¹ nor will it order the document to be impounded in the hands of an officer of the court,¹² except where forgery is alleged, in which case it may be held for the purposes of a criminal prosecution.¹³ The inspection must be had while the document is in the hands of the party or his attorney.¹⁴ Where the place designated in the application is not proper or suitable, the court will designate another place where the examination sought can be had.¹ Inspection must be made at reasonable times,² and cannot be made by all persons generally.³ The court will not, however, limit the number of assistants to be employed by the applicant in making the inspection, though it will protect the party producing against an abuse of the privilege granted.⁴ Where the aid of an expert is necessary to render the inspection of any service to the applicant, the court will, on due cause shown, authorize the inspection by an expert.⁵

Return of Documents After Inspection. — Where the object of the order has been accomplished the documents will be delivered to the custody of the party producing them.⁶

11. Sealing Up Books. — Where books are produced for inspection it is the uniform practice of the court to permit the person so producing them to seal up those parts which do not relate to the subject of litigation.⁷ If the applicant breaks open and examines the portion so sealed up he renders himself liable as for a contempt.⁸ If the adverse party can show any fair grounds for supposing that any part which is material has been, whether designedly or not, sealed up, the court may order such part to be opened.⁹ The affidavit of the party moved against that the parts so sealed do not relate to the matters in the litigation is sufficient ground for authorizing him to seal them up.¹⁰

12. Production for New Trial. — The court may compel the production on a new trial of a paper produced on notice and improperly removed from the custody of the clerk after the first trial,¹¹ or of a paper which had been produced voluntarily at the first trial and was afterwards removed from the papers of the case.¹² But where the producing party takes back the paper without its having come into the custody of the court, the court cannot compel him to produce it for the new trial.¹³

13. Production in Connection with Examination of Witness Before Trial. — In New York provision is made for the production of the books and papers of the corporation in connection with the examination of an officer of the corporation before trial.¹⁴ The object of this provision is that if a reference to the books becomes necessary during the examination, either to corroborate or contradict a witness, or to make the proof preliminary to the introduction of the books in evidence upon the trial, this proof may be made and the books may be referred to for that purpose. and inspection of the books, but is intended to be, and can only be, ancillary to the examination of the witness.¹ To excuse an officer for noncompliance with the order he must give affirmative proof of his inability to produce the books and show his good faith in the matter.²

14. Taking Copies. — Generally an order for production and inspection carries with it the right to take copies of the documents ordered produced.³

15. Modifying or Vacating Order. — That there may possibly be an abuse of the privilege granted is not sufficient ground for modifying the order, but relief can be sought only when the abuse actually exists.⁴ Where, however, the order may be construed as authorizing an illegal act it will be so modified as to obviate such a construction.⁵ If the order is too broad and includes documents other than those which the applicant is entitled to inspect, it will be modified so as properly to limit the inspection.⁶ The order will be vacated where it is granted without jurisdiction, or where a sufficient showing for the granting of the order was not made,⁷ or where a sufficient inspection is voluntarily offered;⁸ also where the evidence on account of which the inspection is sought is in the nature of hearsay and cannot be used.⁹ A satisfactory showing by the party moved against that the documents sought are not in his possession or under his control is sufficient ground for vacating the order.¹⁰

16. Effect of Noncompliance with Order — a. IN GENERAL. — In the several jurisdictions in which provision is made by statute for the production and inspection of documents, provision is also made for the effect of noncompliance therewith.¹¹ It is generally provided that in case of a failure to obey the order to produce, the court shall give judgment by default where the failure is that of the defendant, or a nonsuit if the plaintiff refuses.¹² The remedy provided by statute for the failure to comply with the order of the court is exclusive.¹³

6. ORDER OF COURT PREREQUISITE. — In some jurisdictions, before the penalty provided by statute for failure to produce can be imposed there must be an order of court, based on notice, requiring the party notified to produce the papers and a failure or refusal on his part to comply therewith.¹⁴

Under the Federal Statute, before a party to an action at law may be held to be in default for failure to produce documents in his possession there must have been an order of the court,¹ made after a motion therefor, of which notice has been given,² so that before he shall be compelled to produce under the penalty of the statute there may first be a judgment of the court upon the question whether or not the evidence so sought is pertinent to the issues and should be produced.³

c. FAILURE TO COMPLY AS CONTEMPT. — In some jurisdictions one disobeying an order of court for the production of documents is subject to commitment for contempt.⁴ It cannot be urged against committal for refusing to produce that the officer before whom the books were to be produced had no authority to take the evidence. Nor is it any excuse that one did not have the books when he was ordered committed for refusal to produce if he did have them when the motion to produce was made.⁵

d. EXCUSING NONCOMPLIANCE. — To relieve a party failing to produce in accordance with the order from the penalty provided therefor, it is his duty to satisfy the court of his inability to comply with the order.⁶ While this may be done by his agent, it is preferable that the party himself should appear and excuse the nonproduction.⁷

A Failure to Respond Personally does not, however, authorize a judgment against him where it appears affirmatively that the document sought is lost.⁸

Sufficiency of Excuse. — The sufficiency of an excuse for the nonproduction of a document, where a party has been required to produce, is addressed to the discretion of the court in which the requisition is made.⁹

Where the Applicant's Interference Prevents the production of the documents sought, their nonproduction will be excused.¹⁰

III. POWER OF LEGISLATURE TO COMPEL PRODUCTION. — As a general rule Congress has no power to compel a citizen to produce his private books and papers before it for its inspection,¹¹ nor can it confer this power on a special commission created for the purposes of investigating a specific matter over which it has no peculiar jurisdiction,¹² nor has it even the authority to permit the power vested in the federal courts, of compelling the attendance of witnesses and the production of their papers, to be invoked in aid of an

PROFANITY.—See the title BLASPHEMY AND PROFANITY, vol. 4, p. 580.

PROFERT.—In common-law pleading, where a party to an action relied in his pleading on a deed under seal to which he was party or privy, the deed had to be shown forth or produced in court, hence the party in his pleading alleged that he brought the deed into court, although it was not actually done. This was called profert in curia, and entitled the opposite party to oyer of the deed.⁴

(See also BUSINESS, vol. 5, p. 71; OCCUPATION, vol. 21, p. 769; and the title OCCUPATION, BUSINESS, AND PRIVILEGE TAXES, vol. 21, p. 770.)—A profession is a vocation in which a professed knowledge of some department of science or learning is used by its practical application to the affairs of others, either in advising, guiding, or teaching them, or in serving their interests or welfare in the practice of an art founded on it. Formerly theology, law, and medicine were specifically known as “the professions;” but as the applications of science and learning are extended to other departments of affairs, other vocations also receive the name. The word implies professed attainments in special knowledge, as distinguished from mere skill; a practical dealing with affairs, as distinguished from mere study or investigation; and an application of such knowledge to uses for others as a vocation, as distinguished from its pursuit for one’s own purposes.⁶

4. Profert.—See Germain v. Wilgus, (C. C. A.) 67 Fed. Calling.—In Thompson v. Bertrand, 23 Ark. 733, it was said: “The objection to the testimony of Scull cannot be sustained. Saying that one is a physician by profession is equivalent to saying that he is a physician by practice. In the sense in which the witness used the word profession, it means a calling, an employment, and this is one of the legitimate meanings of the word.”

Calling—Business—Profession.—See BUSINESS, vol. 5, p. 72.

Chemist.—In construing the United States contract-labor law in U. S. v. Laws, 163 U. S. 266, the court said: “The chemist who places his knowledge acquired from a study of the science to the use of others as he may be employed by them, and as a vocation for the purpose of his own maintenance, must certainly be regarded as one engaged in the practice of a profession which is generally recognized in this country.”

Clergyman.—In Miller v. Kirkpatrick, 29 Pa. St. 229, it was said: “The term profession designates the calling of a minister of the gospel with sufficient precision.”

Lawyer.—In Lanier v. Macon, 59 Ga. 187, it was held that the word profession, in a power to lay taxes, is to be understood as including lawyers, unless the contrary plainly appears.

Public Officers.—The word profession is not, in its commonly accepted signification, appropriate to describe the occupancy of a public office. Schuchardt v. People, 99 Ill. 505.

I. DEFINITION. — The right to profits, denominated profit à prendre, consists of a right to take a part of the soil or produce of the land in which there is a supposable value.¹ Thus, the right of hunting, fishing, or shooting on the land of another, accompanied by the right to keep part or all of the game killed or fish taken;² the right to take gravel, stones, sand, or part of the soil of another's land;³ the right to take seaweed from another's land,⁴ and the right to take wood or timber from the land of another⁵ are profits à prendre. And it has been held that the right of landing and depositing lumber, merchandise, or other goods on another's ground is a profit à prendre.⁶

Profits à Prendre Are Incorporeal Hereditaments. — Chatham v. Williamson, 4 East 469. And see HEREDITAMENTS, vol. 15, p. 337.

2. Hunting and Fishing. — Ewart v. Graham, 7 H. L. Cas. 331; Greathead v. Morley, 3 M. & G. 139, 42 E. C. L. 80, 3 Scott N. R. 538; Tilbury v. Silva, 45 Ch. D. 98; *Pickering v. In Webber v. Lee, 9 Q. B. D. 315, it was held that a grant of a right to shoot over land and to take away part of the game killed was a grant of an interest in the land, within the statute of frauds. See also the title STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

In Bingham v. Salene, 15 Oregon 208, 3 Am. St. Rep. 152, it was held that a grant of "the sole and exclusive right, privilege, and easement to shoot, take, and kill" wild fowl on the "lakes and sloughs and waters" of the grantor, executed to the grantees, "their heirs and assigns forever," with a privilege of "ingress and egress to and from said lakes, waters, and sloughs for the purpose of shooting and taking wild fowl as aforesaid," was a grant of a profit à prendre, and not a mere license revocable at pleasure.

In Morse v. Marshall, 97 Mass. 519, it was held that in an action of tort for cutting and carrying away wood from the plaintiff's close, an allegation in the answer that the defendant "had a legal right to do all that he has done upon any part of the premises," following an allegation of soil and freehold of the defendant in a part of the close, and a denial that he entered any other part, was not a sufficient allegation of any right of the defendant in the close by way either of easement or of profit à prendre.

6. Landing. — Littlefield v. Maxwell, 31 Me. 134, 50 Am. Dec. 653; State v. Wilson, 42 Me.

Mining. — The grant of an exclusive right to all the coal or minerals in a certain lot of land is a corporeal grant — a part of the land itself. But a grant of a right to dig coal in such a lot and carry it away is an incorporeal hereditament — a right of profit à prendre, which does not interfere with the right of the owner of the land to mine in the same lot.²

Water. — The right to take water from another's land has, in a number of cases, been held to be a profit à prendre.³ But in other cases the right has been held to be an easement, and not a profit à prendre.⁴

II. DISTINGUISHED FROM EASEMENT. — Profits à prendre differ from easements in that the former are rights of profit, and the latter are mere rights of convenience without profit.⁵ But the principal distinction is between easements and profits à prendre in gross, the latter being held independently of any dominant estate,⁶ whereas for the existence of an easement two estates,

L. 702; has been held to be an easement only, sustainable by proof of custom by the inhabitants. The grounds upon which these decisions rest are that running water is not a product of the soil, whether above or below the surface, and that it does not remain for any appreciable period of time in any one place. The courts, in these cases, expressly affirm that the right to water in wells or cisterns would be an interest in the land, or a right to a profit à prendre." Hill v. Lord, 48 Me. 99.

In the following cases the right to water was held to be an easement: Bissell v. Grant, 35 Conn. 288; Borst v. Empie, 5 N. Y. 33; Spensley v. Valentine, 34 Wis. 154.

5. Right of Profit and Not Right of Convenience. — Hall on Profits à Prendre 1; Gale on Easements 1; Manning v. Wasdale, 5 Ad. & El. 758, 31 E. C. L. 433; *Race v. Capable of Livery. — In Pierce v. Keator, 70 N. Y. 421, it was said that a profit à prendre "is in its nature corporeal, and is capable of the dominant and the servient, are necessary.¹

III. APPURTENANT. — The right of profit à prendre, if enjoyed by reason of holding a certain other estate, is regarded in the light of an easement appurtenant to such estate.²

IV. IN GROSS. — Where the right of profit à prendre belongs to an individual, distinct from ownership in other lands, it takes the character of an interest or estate in the land itself, rather than that of a proper easement,³ and may be held in fee, for life, or for years.⁴

Assignment and Inheritance. — Profits à prendre in gross are both assignable and inheritable.⁵

V. HOW ACQUIRED OR CREATED. — Profits à prendre are acquired by grant or prescription,⁶ and never by custom.⁷

"It is immaterial, however, whether we call it [the right to take iron ore from one estate appurtenant to another] an easement or a right of profit à prendre annexed to land. It is the same in nature, and is such a right as can be annexed to other land by express grant, and will pass as appurtenant to it." Grubb v. Grubb, 74 Pa. St. 33.

3. Interest or Estate in Land Itself. — Washburn on Easements (4th ed.) 9, 10; Wickham v. Hawker, 7 M. & W. 63; Black v. Elkhorn Min. Co., 49 Fed. Rep. 552; *Goodrich v. Eminent Domain. — In McCotter v. New Shoreham, 21 R. I. 43, it was held that a profit à prendre in gross in the land of another was such an estate or interest in the land itself as to entitle the owner to be heard on the question of damages arising from taking the land for public use.

That Profits à Prendre May Be Held in Gross, see supra, this title, Distinguished from Easement.

4. May Be Held in Fee, for Life, or for Years. — Washburn on Easements (4th ed.) 80; Goodrich v. Burbank, 12 Allen (Mass.) 461; Huff v. McCauley, 53 Pa. St. 210; Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. St. 21.

Pennsylvania. — Sheets v. Allen, 89 Pa. St. 47.

Parol Agreement. — A right in the nature of a profit à prendre cannot be created by a parol agreement for a partition of land. Taylor v. Millard, 118 N. Y. 251.

The right reserved, being an incorporeal hereditament, could pass only by deed, and were it otherwise, the assignment of such an interest, since the statute of frauds, must be in writing. Thompson v. Gregory, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 81.

Fee. — In Morse v. Marshall, 97 Mass. 519, it was held that a right in A to take growing wood and crops from land of B and to make such other use of the land as was not inconsistent with B's unused right, incident to his title, to flow it for his millpond, was not a right which could be acquired by prescription.

7. Never Acquired by Custom. — England. — Fowler v. Sanders, Cro. Jac. 446; Tilbury v. Silva, 45 Ch. D. 98; Weekly v. Wildman, 1 Ld.

PROFITS. (See also the titles DIVIDENDS, vol. 9, p. 679; PARTNERSHIP, vol. 22, p. 2. And see EARN — EARNINGS, vol. 10, p. 394; MESNE PROFITS, vol. 20, p. 609.) — Profits are the advantages realized in money by the sale of property at a price exceeding the cost,¹ or the receipts of any enterprise or business exceeding the expenses incident to it,² and in this sense "profits"

Raym. 405; Mellor v. Spateman, 1 Saund. 343; Rogers v. Brenton, 10 Q. B. 60, 59 E. C. L. 60; Manning v. Wasdale, 5 Ad. & El. 758, 31 E. C. L. 433.

1. Sale of Property. — Abb. L. Dict. See also Carter v. Arnold, 134 Mo. 208; Matthews v. Crosby, 56 N. H. 21; Chilbeg v. Jones, 3 Wash. 530.

Increase in Value of Securities. — In Cross v. Long Island L. & T. Co., 75 Hun (N. Y.) 534, a fund representing the increase in value of the securities of an estate was held not to be profit within the ordinary acceptance of that term. The court said: "It is an accretion or increase from natural causes."

A provision in a will gave to the widow, for life, the income and profits of all the testator's estate. It was held that this did not entitle her to the premiums realized by the executor upon a sale of the securities of the estate. Matter of Clark, 62 Hun (N. Y.) 275. To the same effect see Smith v. Hooper, (Md. 1902) 51 Atl. Rep. 848; Duclos v. Benner, 62 Hun (N. Y.) 428, 136 N. Y. 560; Thomson's Estate, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 198; Park's Estate, 173 Pa. St. 190. And see INCOME, vol. 16, p. 147.

Slaves. — A gift of profits has been held to include the increase of female slaves. Holmes v. Mitchell, 4 Md. 550.

Place of Profit. — In Astley v. New Tivoli, (1899) 1 Ch. 151, it was held that a trustee of a covering deed relating to debentures issued by a company, who was nominated and paid by the company, was a holder of a "place of profit" under the company, and therefore incapable of acting as a director.

Place of Trust or Profit. — See TRUST, and see the title PUBLIC OFFICERS, post.

2. Receipts Exceeding Expenditures. — Abb. L. Dict.; Dent v. London Tramways Co., 16 Ch. D. 344; Providence Rubber Co. v. Goodyear, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 804; Hazeltine v. Belfast, etc., R. Co., 79 Me. 417; Freeman v. Freeman, 142 Mass. 102; People v. Niagara County, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 20; Lepore v. Twin Cities Nat. Bldg., etc., Assoc., 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 279. And see Dent v. Expenses. — In Penn v. Whitehead, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 529, it was said: "The idea of profits presupposes the payment of all necessary expenses of the business by which such profits are made."

"Profits" Used Synonymously with "Dividends." — Com. v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 74 Pa. St. 91.

Profits and Good Will Distinguished. — In Carey v. Gunnison, (Iowa 1883) 17 N. W. Rep. 885, it was said: "Profits are the gains realized from trade; good will is that which brings trade." See also Nelson v. Hiatt, 38 Neb. 485.

Profits Derived by Solicitor. — In In re Gallard, (1896) 1 Q. B. 68, it was held that the profits derived by a solicitor were the amount of his costs, less his disbursements out of pocket in the particular matter, and that no allowance could be made to him in respect of his general office expenses.

Contractors. — The word profits applied to a contractor means the difference to the contractor between the cost to him of doing the work and the price to be paid for it. Allison v. Tennessee Coal, etc., Co., (Tenn. Ch. 1897) 46 S. W. Rep. 356. See also Smith v. O'Donnell, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 478.

Labor — Wages. (See also the title MASTER AND SERVANT, vol. 20, p. 187.) — In Smith v. Brooke, 49 Pa. St. 150, it was said: "Both in Heebner v. Chave, 5 Pa. St. 117, and in Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Costello, 33 Pa. St. 241, the 'wages of laborers,' which the statute was designed to protect, were defined to be the earnings of the laborer, by his personal manual toil, and not the profits which the contractor derives from the labor of others. The cases illustrate the distinction between the two kinds of gains or rewards. It is the difference between the sale of your own labor and a sale of another man's labor at something more than you pay for it. What is received for another's labor over and above what is paid for it is called profit, and such profits were held not to be within the protection of the statute." And see EARNINGS, vol. 10, p. 395.

Profits Used in Construction. (See also CONSTRUCTION, vol. 7, p. 2, and see the title RAILROADS, post.) — Where a railroad company replaced a wooden bridge by a much more costly stone bridge, it was held that the earnings adequate to pay for the latter, beyond the expense of building anew a like wooden bridge, were to be deemed "profits used for construction." Hartford, etc., R. Co. v. Grant, 9 Blatchf. (U. S.) 542, 93 U. S. 225.

Profits and Gains — English Income Tax. — See New York L. Ins. Co. v. Styles, 14 App. Cas. 381; Mersey Loan Co. v. Wootton, 4 Times Rep. 164; Gresham L. Assur. Soc. v. Styles, 24 Q. B. D. 500, 25 Q. B. D. 351; Erichsen v. Last, 8 Q. B. D. 414; Russell v. Town, etc., Bank, 13 App. Cas. 418, 58 L. J. P. C. 8; Burial Board v. Revenue Com'rs, 13 Q. B. D. 9. And see GAIN, vol. 14, p. 575.

Partnership or Company Established for Purpose of Profit. — It has been held that a mutual benefit society formed by several persons, being partners or shareholders, who subscribe money and carry on business substantially for the benefit of the individual members among themselves, and not for the benefit of the society, is not a partnership or company established for any purpose of profit. Bear v.

and "net profits" are for all legal purposes synonymous expressions.¹ But

But in the following cases similar organizations were held to be such companies: Bolton v. Bolton, 73 Me. 299; State v. Critchett, 37 Minn. 13; State v. Farmers', etc., Mut. Benev. Assoc., 18 Neb. 281; Farmer v. State, 69 Tex. 561.

See generally the title BENEVOLENT OR BENE-FICIAL ASSOCIATIONS, vol. 3, p. 1041.

Profits of a Partnership include the rise in value of partnership assets. Robinson v. Ashton, L. R. 20 Eq. 25.

As to what sharing of profits constitutes the relation of partnership, see the title PARTNERSHIP, vol. 22, pp. 17 et seq., 40 et seq.

1. Net Profits. — Park v. Tennille, 20 Ga. 118; Fuller v. Miller, 105 Mass. 103; Wallace v. Beebe, 12 Allen (Mass.) 354; Connolly v. Davidson, 15 Minn. 519; Hentz v. Pennsylvania Co., 134 Pa. St. 346; Jones v. Davidson, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 452.

Profits of Estate. — A testator gave his property to W. subject to the payment to his widow annually for her life of the entire rents and profits of the estate remaining after the debts had been paid. It was held that the widow was not entitled to half of the gross income of the estate. The court said: "The word profits, used in this connection, necessarily imports the balance of the income after paying expenses." Guthrie v. Wheeler, 51 Conn. 213.

Depreciation of Buildings in which a business is carried on, though they were erected by expenditure of the capital invested, is not ordinarily or necessarily considered in estimating the profits. Eyster v. Centennial Board of Finance, 94 U. S. 503.

Profits of Corporation. — In estimating the profits of a corporation, the assets, resources, and funds of the company must consist of cash on hand and other property, and if such assets exceed the liabilities, then profit exists. Hubbard v. Weare, 79 Iowa 689, 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 176, citing Miller v. Bradish, 69 Iowa 278. See also People v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 72 Cal. 203.

The profits of a company are not such sum as may remain after the payment of every debt, but are the excess of ordinary receipts over expenses properly chargeable to revenue account. Mills v. Northern R. Co., L. R. 5 Ch. 631; Birch v. Cropper, 14 App. Cas. 525; Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co., 41 Ch. D. 1, 58 L. J. Ch. 408.

In Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Tennessee, 153 U. S. 497, it was said: "The term profits, out of which dividends alone can properly be declared, denotes what remains after defraying every expense, including loans falling due, as well as the interest on such loans." See also Corry v. Londonderry, etc., R. Co., 29 Beav. 263.

Winding Up Company — Double Meaning of Term. — In Bishop v. Smyrna, etc., R. Co., (1895) 2 Ch. 269, Kekewich, J., said: "In ordinary parlance, among mercantile men and lawyers, profits mean that sum which periodically, at the end of the half-year, or year, or other time fixed by agreement, is divisible among the partners — a term which, of course, includes members of a company — as income. It is sometimes called 'net profits,' only to distinguish it from what are called 'gross profits.' It is the sum which is ascertained by the taking of a proper account of what has been made by trading and is therefore distributable between the parties entitled. But the word profits is also used properly in this sense: 'When you come to wind up a concern, you have to pay all the debts; you have to repay to each partner what he has brought in as capital; and after that has all been done, if the concern has been a successful one, there is a balance, and that balance is profit; it cannot properly be called anything else.'

Articles of association provided that the directors should be paid in each year as remuneration for their services a sum equal to three per cent. on the "net profits" of the company of such year. It was held that the term "net profits" as thus used applied to profits made by the company as a going concern, and not to profits made by a sale of the whole undertaking and assets in a winding up. Frames v. Bultfontein Min. Co., (1891) 1 Ch. 140.

Sewer Made for Profit. — Ferrand v. Hallas Land, etc., Co., (1893) 2 Q. B. 141; Minehead Local Board v. Luttrell, (1894) 2 Ch. 178; Croysdale v. Sunbury-on-Thames Urban Dist. Council, (1898) 2 Ch. 519.

Definition of Net Profits. — In Park v. Grant Locomotive Works, 40 N. J. Eq. 121, it was said: "The words 'net profits' define themselves. They mean what shall remain as the clear gains of any business venture, after deducting the capital invested in the business, the expenses incurred in its conduct, and the losses sustained in its prosecution." See also Glasier v. Rolls, 42 Ch. D. 453, 30 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 193; Repton v. Hodgson, 7 Q. B. 84, 53 E. C. L. 82; Fuller v. Miller, 105 Mass. 105; Hunter v. Roberts, 83 Mich. 63; McCulsky v. Klosterman, 20 Oregon 111.

"The 'net profits' must mean after all charges and expenses deducted." Owston v. Ogle, 13 East 538, per Lord Ellenborough.

"Net profits" means the surplus left after deducting all losses. Welsh v. Canfield, 60 Md. 475.

Where, in articles of association, it was provided that "in cases of dispute as to the amount of net profits, the decision of the company in general meeting shall be final," the court declined to interfere on the question of the meaning of "net profits." Lambart v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co., 51 L. J. Ch. 882.

Same — Personal Expenses. — The transfer of a partner's share in the "net profits" of a firm does not include his claim against the firm for personal expenses incurred for the benefit of the partnership. Stewart v. Stebbins, 30 Miss. 66.

Same — Sale of Goods. — "Net profits consist of the money received from sales of goods, deducting their cost and expenses." Wallace v. Beebe, 19 Allen (Mass.) 357.

Same — Interest. — Under a contract by which a salesman was to receive for his the term is sometimes used in the sense of gross profits or proceeds.¹ Profit is also the advantage which land procures to the owner by way of compensation for its use. The phrase "rents, issues, and profits of lands" does not import that the land has been sold and an advance in price realized.²

Money. — The term "profits" does not necessarily imply money, but may include property other than money.³

services a share of the net profits of the business, the interest on capital invested by the principal in the business was held not to be an expense to be deducted in ascertaining the net profits. Paine v. Howells, 90 N. Y. 660.

In Tutt v. Land, 50 Ga. 350, it was said: "Net profits of an adventure do not mean what is made over the losses, expenses, and interest on the amount invested. The term includes simply the gain that accrues on the investment, after deducting the losses and expenses of the business." See also Sanford v. Barney, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 108.

Same — Value — Rental Value. — On a question as to damages suffered by the defendant through delay by the plaintiff in furnishing a boiler for the defendant's steamboat, it was held that what the defendant might have made out of his boat during the period of delay represented his loss, whether it was called "value," "rental value," or "net profits," all of which terms in such connection mean the same thing. Logemann v. Pauly, 100 Wis. 673. See also Shepard v. Milwaukee Gas Light Co., 15 Wis. 318; Poposkey v. Munkwitz, 68 Wis. 322.

1. Gross Profits or Proceeds. — Stewart v. Stewart, 31 N. J. Eq. 406; Van Dyck v. McQuade, 86 N. Y. 38; People v. New York, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 606.

2. Land. — Abb. L. Dict. See also RENTS AND PROFITS.

"Under the term profit is comprehended the produce of the soil, whether it arise above or below the surface, as herbage, wood, turf, coals, minerals, stones; * * * also fish in a pond or running water." Bouv. L. Dict., quoted in Russell v. Berry, (Ark. 1902) 67 S. W. Rep. 884, and in Jones v. Britton, 102 N. Car. 190, per Avery, J., dissenting. See also Ladd v. Smith, 107 Ala. 506; Koen v. Bartlett, 41 W. Va. 559.

Rents, issues, and profits of land are equivalent to the yearly products of the land. Bruce v. Thompson, 26 Vt. 747.

A father purchased a farm and had it conveyed to himself; one of his sons, with his assent, went into the possession of the farm upon an understanding that he should contribute such sum as could be spared off the farm, after yielding a living to himself, towards the payment of a mortgage thereon, until the mortgage should be paid, when he was to have the farm. It was held that the money that the son contributed was neither rents nor profits of the land. Henderson v. Henderson, 15 Can. L. T. 397.

Same — Produce Fed to Cattle. — While the defendant was in possession of land as caretaker or tenant at will, the owner put his cattle thereon to be fed and cared for by the defendant. It was held that the produce of the land which the cattle ate was profits, which the owner, by means of his cattle, took to himself for his own use and benefit, and as long as the cattle were upon the land the defendant was not in exclusive possession, and the statute of limitations did not begin to run in his favor. Rennie v. Frame, 29 Ont. 586.

Same — Full Use of Property. — In Land v. Otley, 4 Rand. (Va.) 225, it was said: "'The full use of property' is an expression equivalent to the profits of the property."

Same — Devise. — In Blamford v. Blamford, 3 Bulst. 101, it was held that a desire that the profits of a lease should be put out to the use and benefit of B was a devise of the lease itself. See also Land v. Otley, 4 Rand. (Va.) 225.

Same — Distress. — In Melick v. Benedict, 43 N. J. L. 425, it was held that one-half the profits of a coalyard reserved as rent might be distrained for if the amount appeared in books of account. The court negatived the contention that the word profits was too uncertain to allow of distress.

Profits of Plantation. — In Taylor v. Harwell, 65 Ala. 11, it was said: "At the death of the testator, in the community in which he lived and died * * * the term profits, when applied to the cultivation of a plantation, had * * * a general, popular signification. It was never confounded with rents or with proceeds; it denoted the annual gain, or income, from the sale of products, after a deduction of the expenses of cultivation. There was no deduction because of the value of the labor, for the labor was the property of the owner, as was the land cultivated."

Profits and Damages. — By an Act of Congress, courts of equity were authorized, upon the entry of a decree in any case for an infringement of a patent, to award to the complainant, in addition to the profits to be accounted for by the defendant, the damages the complainant had sustained thereby. In construing this act the court said: "The terms profits and 'damages' as used in the act are hardly convertible. They seem to mean different things. The latter are to be awarded 'in addition' to the former. Profits doubtless, refer to what the defendant has gained by the unlawful use of the patented invention; and damages, to what the complainant has lost." Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co. v. Van Antwerp, 2 B. & A. Pat. Cas. 252, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,600.

Profit and Income. — See People v. Niagara County, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 23; Busby v. Russell, 10 Ohio Cir. Dec. 25. See also INCOME, vol. 16, p. 150.

A lessee of land agreed to pay to the lessor as rent one-third of all the profits realized from oil or gas. It was held that the term profits, as thus used, was not equivalent to "income," but meant the net amount realized after deducting expenses. Poterie Gas Co. v. Poterie, 179 Pa. St. 68. See also INCOME, vol. 16, p. 147.

3. Money Not Necessarily Implied. — Croysdale

PROHIBIT—PROHIBITION. (See also the titles INTOXICATING LIQUORS, vol. 17, p. 189; LOCAL OPTION, vol. 19, p. 486.)—Prohibition means a forbidding to do; an inhibition; an interdiction.¹

v. Sunbury-on-Thames Urban Dist. Council, (1898) 2 Ch. 519; Carter v. Arnold, 134 Mo. 195; Jones v. Davis, 48 N. J. Eq. 493.

1. Prohibition.—Talbott v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 74 Md. 545.

Prohibit—Regulation and Restraint.—It has been held that a power to prohibit does not embrace a power to regulate. State v. Fay, 44 N. J. L. 476. See also St. Louis v. Smith, 2 Mo. 113.

But in Nelson v. State, 17 Ind. App. 403, where counsel contended that the word prohibit when applied to the sale of liquor meant to forbid it altogether, to enjoin it absolutely, the court said: "We cannot concur in this proposition. The statute, without in terms forbidding the sale, provides a penalty. It is the penalty which is effective in the enforcement of laws. The enactment of the penalty is equivalent to forbidding the act; and while this may not prohibit in the sense of preventing all sales, it provides for the punishment of such as may be made contrary to the statute."

And that the term may be applied to a restraint upon the liquor traffic, as well as to a total prohibition, see People v. Quant, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 2 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 410.

Same—Hackmen.—The title of an ordinance was as follows: "An ordinance to prohibit hotel porters and runners, hack and 'bus men, and peddlers from soliciting custom on the platform of" a certain depot. The ordinance contained a proviso that standing by their hacks or omnibuses or their horses by hackmen within four feet of the platform should not be considered a violation of its provision. It was held that this proviso did not render the ordinance void as not being covered by the title, although counsel contended that a title that prohibits would not include restraint or regulation. Emporia v. Shaw, 6 Kan. App. 808.

Marine Insurance.—In Odiorne v. New England Mut. Marine Ins. Co., 101 Mass. 551, it was held that where a policy of insurance on a vessel prohibited it from specified waters and ports between certain dates, such prohibition constituted a warranty that the vessel should not enter those waters or ports during that time.

I. DEFINITION AND SCOPE OF TITLE — Definition. — A writ of prohibition is an extraordinary writ, issuing out of a superior court, directed to the judge and parties of a suit in an inferior court, commanding them to cease from the prosecution thereof, upon a suggestion that either the cause originally or some collateral matter arising therein is beyond the jurisdiction of the court.¹

Scope of Title. — The question most often discussed in prohibition cases is the jurisdiction of some particular tribunal or officer to take some particular action. Obviously a consideration of such jurisdictional questions does not fall within the scope of an article on prohibition, as it involves a consideration of the rights, powers, and duties of all classes of public officers and courts, and depends upon questions not peculiar to, and which do not always arise in, prohibition proceedings.² This article is confined to a consideration of the rules governing the use of the writ, and the special cases cited are intended merely as illustrative of the rules given.

II. NATURE AND ORIGIN OF REMEDY — 1. A Common-law Writ. — The writ of prohibition is a common-law remedy against the encroachment, excess, or improper assumption of jurisdiction,³ and has been said to be as old as the common law itself.¹ It is an available remedy in the United States, except in jurisdictions where it has been abolished by statute.²

2. Original Remedial Writ. — Prohibition is an original, remedial writ.³ The proceeding to obtain a writ of prohibition is an independent original proceeding and cannot be considered as a part of the action prohibited.⁴

3. Extraordinary Prerogative Character. — Prohibition is an extraordinary remedy,⁵ and at common law was a prerogative writ.⁶

4. Civil Proceeding. — The writ of prohibition is a civil proceeding, irrespective of whether the action prohibited arises in a civil or criminal proceeding.⁷ The proceeding is a suit,⁸ and a case in prohibition is a qui tam action.⁹

5. As Counterpart of Mandamus. — The writ of prohibition is the counterpart of the writ of mandamus, and is frequently so defined by statute. The one forbids the doing of things which ought not to be done, while the other commands the doing of things which ought to be done.¹⁰ A statute defining the writ of prohibition as the "counterpart" of the writ of mandamus is merely declaratory of the common law and does not enlarge the scope of the writ.¹¹

Contra. — Williams v. Lewis, (Idaho 1898) 54 Pac. Rep. 619, holding that the statute defining writs of prohibition as the counterpart of mandamus authorizes the issuance of the writ to restrain purely ministerial action.

6. Distinguished from Injunction. — Prohibition is a legal remedy; injunction is an equitable remedy.¹ The writ of prohibition is directed to and operates directly upon the court, preventing it from exercising a jurisdiction which it does not possess, while an injunction is directed to the parties and not to the court, and recognizes the jurisdiction of the court as existing.²

7. Distinguished from Procedendo. — A procedendo is a writ commanding an inferior court to proceed to judgment. It gives no decision, but directs one. A prohibition is the opposite of a procedendo. It prohibits courts from exceeding their jurisdiction and meddling with causes that do not belong to them.³

III. PRINCIPLES GOVERNING ISSUANCE OF WRIT — 1. Something to Operate on. — The writ can only issue where there is some court or person to whom it may be addressed and against whom it may be enforced,⁴ and there must be some pending cause in the court sought to be restrained upon which the writ of prohibition may operate.⁵

2. Nature of Acts Prohibited — a. WANT OF JURISDICTION. — The Office of the Writ is to arrest the proceedings of any tribunal, corporation, board, or person when such proceedings are without or in excess of the jurisdiction of such tribunal.⁶

Court Martial Functus Officio. — Where the plaintiff had been pronounced guilty and sentenced by a court martial, and the sentence had been ratified and approved by the king, and executed, it was held too late to apply for the writ, for the court martial ceased to exist when it had performed all its functions, and there was no one against whom the prohibition could be directed. Matter of Poe, 5 B. & Ad. 681, 27 E. C. L. 153.

Illustrations. — The writ lies to prevent a court having jurisdiction of an action from issuing a writ not authorized by law. State v. Slover, 126 Mo. 652.

In a case where the court has no power to order a reference, but nevertheless assumes to do so, prohibition will lie. In re London Scottish Permanent Bldg. Soc., 63 L. J. Q. B. D. 112.

A void personal judgment against a tax fined to that part of the proceedings which is beyond the jurisdiction.¹

Consent to the Jurisdiction is no bar to the issuance of a writ of prohibition founded upon want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter, since consent cannot confer jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the action.² But objection to the jurisdiction over the person may be waived in various ways, and when it is so waived, a writ of prohibition will not be granted.³

Numerous Illustrations of the application of these rules to particular classes of cases are collected in a succeeding section of this article.⁴

b. ERRORS IN EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION — Statement of Rule. — Where the inferior court has jurisdiction of the matter in controversy, prohibition will not lie.⁵ The writ does not lie to prevent a subordinate court from deciding erroneously, or from enforcing an erroneous judgment in a case in which it collector may be restrained by prohibition. Mallan v. Bransford, 86 Va. 675.

A prohibition will be granted wherever an inferior court in handling matters clearly within its jurisdiction transgresses the bounds prescribed to it by law. State v. Ridgell, 2 Bailey L. (S. Car.) 560, wherein the court arrested by prohibition the execution of judgment of death, erroneously awarded for an offense not capital.

In Ex p. Smith, 23 Ala. 94, it was admitted that the chancellor had jurisdiction to appoint a receiver, but instead of himself exercising that power he had ordered that the receiver be appointed by the register. This was held to be such an excess of jurisdiction as would support a writ of prohibition. Two judges dissented, upon the ground that the order was merely erroneous.

In Scollay v. Dunn, Quincy (Mass.) 74, the writ was granted to the court of vice-admiralty on the ground that the suit should have been against the ship and its cargo, and not against the owner.

So prohibition will lie to restrain proceedings of an inferior court, where a collateral matter arising out of the proceedings does not belong to that jurisdiction. State v. Hopkins, Dudley L. (S. Car.) 101, citing State v. Whyte, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 176.

1. Where a prohibition is sought as to certain matters, part of which are within the jurisdiction of the lower court, the writ of prohibition ought not to be wholly denied, but the court ought to mould the writ and to limit it to so much of the matter as is beyond the jurisdiction of the court. Per Brett, L. J., in Reg. v. Local Government Board, 10 Q. B. D. 309. And to the same effect is Reg. v. Westmoreland County Ct. Judge, 58 L. T. N. S. 417, 36 W. R. 477.

Gross Defects or Irregularities in the proceedings may be ground for prohibition. See State v. King, 48 La. Ann. 292.

See also State v. Ridgell, 2 Bailey L. (S. Car.) 560, wherein a slave was erroneously convicted of burglary and sentenced to death, but the execution was arrested by prohibition upon the ground that the slave was not guilty of burglary, and therefore, could not be sentenced to death. And see comments on this case in State v. Nathan, 4 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 515.

In Gould v. Gapper, 5 East 365, Lord Ellenborough said: "We cannot feel ourselves warranted in holding that the grounds of granting prohibitions are so narrow and limited as to be confined solely to cases of excess of jurisdiction." Quoted with approval in State v. Ridgell, 2 Bailey L. (S. Car.) 562.

though there has been a tendency remarked in some cases to extend the writ to acts not very strongly marked with a judicial character.¹ Where a tribunal is vested with both judicial and non-judicial powers, the writ will lie as to the former, but not as to the latter.²

Ministerial or Executive Action. — The writ will not lie to prevent acts of merely ministerial, administrative, or executive character.³ Where the power to issue writs of prohibition rests upon constitutional provisions and is given in general terms, the legislature cannot enlarge the scope or office of the writ so as to include ministerial functions.⁴

d. ACTS ALREADY PERFORMED. — The writ will not issue where the act sought to be prohibited has already been performed.⁶ But the writ may properly be granted so long as anything remains to be done to carry into effect the illegal action already taken,¹ and in such a case complete relief may be granted by undoing what has already been improperly done.² The writ may properly command the lower tribunal to perform affirmative acts necessary to carry into effect the prohibition.³ Where the court has completely acted and the judgment or order has been entered and nothing remains but ministerial acts in pursuance of such order, prohibition will not lie to arrest the performance of such acts.⁴ It is the situation existing at the time when the writ of prohibition is ordered, and not at the time when the writ is served, that fixes the extent of the power of the higher court to interfere with the proceedings in the lower court.⁵

In Burger v. Carter, 1 McMull. L. (S. Car.) 410, it was held that prohibition would lie to restrain the enforcement of a tax although the tax collector was conceded to be a ministerial officer. This case is opposed to the great weight of authority. See infra, this title, VI. 58. Taxation.

In Donovan v. Vicksburg, 29 Miss. 247, 64 Am. Dec. 143, it was held that prohibition would lie to prevent a city and its marshal from summarily seizing and selling hogs running at large within the city, upon the ground that the ordinance authorizing such action was unconstitutional and void, in that it did not provide for due process of law. This case is clearly unsound.

Courts of General Jurisdiction. — The writ lies to courts of general jurisdiction as well as to courts of limited or special jurisdiction.¹

Appellate Courts. — The writ lies to appellate courts in proper cases.²

b. JUDICIAL AND QUASI-JUDICIAL OFFICERS. — The writ lies against any person or persons assuming to exercise judicial or quasi-judicial power, although not strictly or technically a court.³

c. MINISTERIAL, EXECUTIVE, AND LEGISLATIVE OFFICERS. — The writ will not lie against ministerial, executive, or legislative officers who do not assume to exercise any judicial powers.⁴

d. PRIVATE PERSONS AND CORPORATIONS. — The writ will not lie against private parties alone or against public or private corporations or their officers.⁵

e. APPLICATIONS OF RULE. — Inasmuch as the propriety of issuing the writ depends upon the nature of the act to be restrained rather than upon the general character of the particular officer or tribunal, and as incidental judicial powers are frequently conferred upon persons whose main duties are not judicial, the application of these rules will be given in connection with the consideration of particular grounds for the writ.⁶

4. Threatened Exercise of Power. — It must clearly appear that the inferior tribunal is actually proceeding or is about to proceed in some matter over which it possesses no jurisdiction, and when such intention is not clearly shown the writ will be refused.⁷ It will not be presumed that the inferior

The object of the writ of prohibition is to prevent further action in a case where jurisdictional power and authority to act are denied; the function of the writ of certiorari is to undo matters which had taken such shape as not to be remedied by the writ of prohibition; the writ of certiorari is a substantive and far-reaching writ, concurrent with and frequently taking the place of the writ of prohibition. State v. Judge, 48 La. Ann. 1502.

inferior court from exercising jurisdiction in a particular case in a class of cases in which such court has jurisdiction.¹ But where an appeal will not lie, prohibition will lie to correct an erroneous decision of a jurisdictional question by an inferior tribunal.² Where an appeal is a wholly inadequate remedy, the fact that an appeal will lie is not ground for denying a writ of prohibition.³ So, where the remedy by appeal is adequate but not sufficiently speedy, the writ lies.⁴ The absence of a remedy by appeal or writ of error is not of itself sufficient ground to authorize a writ of prohibition, provided the court had jurisdiction.⁵

Proceedings in Cause. — If there is an adequate remedy by proceedings in the cause itself, such remedy must first be exhausted before application for the writ of prohibition will be sustained.⁶ The writ will not be granted where relief may be had by motion.⁷

Equitable Remedies. — The existence of an adequate remedy by proceedings in equity is sufficient ground for denial of the writ.¹

6. Discretion of Court — a. STATEMENT OF RULE. — It is usually held that a prohibition is not a writ of right, but that its allowance rests in the sound discretion of the court.² In some jurisdictions the rule is that the granting of the writ is obligatory in clear cases where there is an entire absence of jurisdiction, the courts holding that it is discretionary only where there is another legal remedy, or where the jurisdiction is doubtful or depends upon facts not apparent of record, or where the application is made by a stranger instead of by a party in interest.³

b. CONSIDERATIONS AFFECTING EXERCISE OF DISCRETION. — Prohibition, like other prerogative writs, should be used with great caution and forbearance,¹ and should be granted only where a want of jurisdiction clearly exists.²

Necessity. — Prohibition will only issue in cases of extreme necessity.³ Thus, the writ will not be issued to restrain an order void upon its face.⁴ So, if no injury can result from the proceedings complained of, the writ will be refused.⁵

Where the Proposed Proceeding Has Been Abandoned, the court in its discretion may refuse the writ.⁶

Negligence or Laches on the part of the applicant is sufficient ground for withholding the writ.⁷

Balance of Benefits. — The writ will not be granted where a greater injustice would be done by its issuance than would be prevented by its operation.⁸

7. Preliminary Objection to Jurisdiction. — It is the usual rule that the writ will not be issued in any case until the party who complains of the abuse of power shall have first sought redress in the inferior tribunal and failed to obtain it.⁹ But this rule is not jurisdictional. It is simply a rule of practice, court upon an application for a writ of prohibition has a discretion to allow the plaintiff below to abandon that part of his claim which is beyond the jurisdiction and to proceed with the rest. Ellis v. Fleming, 1 C. P. D. 237, 45 L. J. C. Pl. 512.

IV. JURISDICTION TO ISSUE WRIT — 1. In England. — In England the jurisdiction to issue the writ of prohibition was originally exercised only by the court of King's Bench, though other courts, even the court of chancery, afterwards assumed jurisdiction to issue the writ.²

2. In United States — a. FEDERAL COURTS — (1) Supreme Court — To District Court. — By express provision of Act of Congress, the Supreme Court has original jurisdiction to issue writs of prohibition to the District Court when sitting as a court of admiralty.³ But in no other class of cases has the Supreme Court original jurisdiction to issue a writ of prohibition to the District Court.⁴

To Circuit Courts. — The Supreme Court has jurisdiction to issue a writ of prohibition to the Circuit Court in aid of its appellate jurisdiction, but only in such cases. It has no jurisdiction to issue the writ until an appeal is taken, nor in cases where no appeal will lie, in the absence of special statutory authority.⁵

Appellate Jurisdiction. — The Supreme Court has appellate jurisdiction in prohibition when the jurisdictional amount is involved.⁶

(2) Circuit and District Courts. — The Circuit and District Courts have jurisdiction to issue the writ, but only when necessary for the exercise of their jurisdiction.⁷ The Circuit Courts of the United States have no jurisdiction to issue writs of prohibition to the state courts.⁸

b. STATE COURTS — (1) Appellate Courts. — In many states, by constitutional or statutory provisions, the Supreme Court, or appellate court of last resort, is given original jurisdiction to issue writs of prohibition.⁹ Where

In Colorado, the right of the Supreme Court to issue writs of prohibition is directly conferred by Colo. Const., art. 6, § 3, and does not depend upon the statute. People v. District Ct., 26 Colo. 386.

In Illinois, the Supreme Court under the constitution has no jurisdiction in prohibition except in aid of its jurisdiction on appeal or writ of error. People v. Circuit Ct., 173 Ill. 277, citing People v. Circuit Ct., 169 Ill. 201.

In Missouri, the Court of Appeals has jurisdiction to issue writs of prohibition to all inferior courts whether courts of record or not. School Dist. No. 6 v. Burris, 84 Mo. App. 654. The Court of Appeals has power to issue writs of habeas corpus, quo warranto, mandamus, and other original remedial writs, and hence to issue prohibition where the subject-matter is not within the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. State v. Allen, 45 Mo. App. 551. In State v. Seay, 23 Mo. App. 623, it was held that the Court of Appeals, in the exercise of its original jurisdiction within its territorial limits, could issue the writ whether the case was or was not one of which the Supreme Court would have original jurisdiction.

In Nebraska, the constitution does not give the Supreme Court original jurisdiction to award a writ of prohibition as an independent remedy, and it is not within the power of the legislature to confer such jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court. State v. Hall, 47 Neb. 579.

In New York, the special term has no jurisdiction to grant a writ of prohibition to a referee appointed by a justice of the Supreme Court under Laws of 1899, c. 690, § 4, but the writ must issue, if at all, from the appellate division. People v. Nussbaum, 53 N. Y. App. Div. 245.

In South Carolina, the Supreme Court has no original jurisdiction to issue a writ of prohibition, except in the exercise of a supervisory control over the court to which it is directed. Hunter v. Moore, 39 S. Car. 394, following State v. Columbia, 16 S. Car. 412, and 17 S. Car. 80.

In Tennessee, the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to issue a prohibition to restrain an inferior tribunal from usurpation of jurisdiction. Memphis v. Halsey, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 210.

Utah. — Under the Act of Congress giving to the Supreme Court of Utah chancery as well as common-law jurisdiction, it had the power to issue prohibition not only in aid of its appellate jurisdiction, but also as an independent original proceeding, aside from appellate power. People v. Spiers, 4 Utah 385, 482.

In Wisconsin, it has been held that a statute providing that writs of prohibition shall be issued only by the Supreme Court was unconstitutional upon the ground that the constitution gave the circuit courts supervisory control over all inferior courts and tribunals, which included the power to issue the writ of prohibition. State v. Pollard, 112 Wis. 232.

practice of the English chancery court in issuing the writ, either in term time or during the vacation of the law courts.¹ A judge of the Circuit Court in vacation has no authority to issue a writ of prohibition.²

3. Relative Rank of Courts. — The writ lies only as between courts which sustain to each other the relation of superior and inferior, and cannot issue from a court to prohibit another court which is in no manner subordinate or inferior to it.³

V. OPERATION AND ENFORCEMENT OF WRIT. — The Writ Operates Only upon the Particular Suit or proceeding in the court to which it is directed.⁴

An Alternative Writ of prohibition operates as a prohibition until the further order of the court.⁵

In Florida, the power to issue the writ of prohibition as an original proceeding does not belong to the Circuit Court, and can be issued by them only as ancillary to the jurisdiction already acquired. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Spratt, 20 Fla. 122.

In Idaho, all courts except probate and justices' courts may issue prohibition to inferior tribunals where there is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. Rev. Stat., §§ 4994, 4995; Bellevue Water Co. v. Stockslager, (Idaho 1895) 43 Pac. Rep. 558.

In Kentucky, charters of cities of the second class provide that the validity of city ordinances may be tried by prohibition from the Circuit Court on petition ex parte, with appeal to the Court of Appeals. Lexington's Appeal, 96 Ky. 258; Shinkle v. Covington, 83 Ky. 420.

In Louisiana, the power of district and all other courts of appellate jurisdiction except the Supreme Court to issue the writ is limited to cases in aid of appellate jurisdiction. *State v. In New Mexico, the power to issue the writ is confined to the Supreme Court or one of the judges thereof. Tapia v. Martinez, 4 N. Mex. 165.

In North Carolina, the writ of prohibition can issue only from the Supreme Court. State v. Whitaker, 114 N. Car. 818, citing Perry v. Shepherd, 78 N. Car. 83.

In Virginia, superior courts may issue the writ, but county courts cannot. Jackson v. Maxwell, 5 Rand. (Va.) 636.

In Texas, the district court has no supervisory control over inferior tribunals and cannot issue a writ of prohibition against proceedings in a justice's court. Seele v. State, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 495.

1. Courts of Chancery. — Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S. 167. See also Montezuma v. Minor, 70 Ga. 191.

But in State v. Hopkins, Dudley L. (S. Car.) 101, the writ was issued by a chancery court. See also Bank Lick Turnpike Co. v. Phelps, 81 Ky. 613.

2. In Vacation. — Ex p. Boothe, 64 Ala. 312; Ex p. Ray, 45 Ala. 15.

In Ex p. Withers, 3 Brev. (S. Car.) 83, it was held that the writ could not be granted by the judge at chambers, but must be awarded by the court in term.

But if the necessity of the case requires it, the circuit judge in vacation may issue a rule to show cause returnable to the next term of the court, which rule, being served on the inferior court or judge and the parties to be affected by it, operates as a prohibition until the further order of the court. Ex p. Ray, 45 Ala. 15. See also Ex p. Boothe, 64 Ala. 312; Doughty v. Walker, 54 Ga. 595.

3. Relation of Superior and Inferior Courts Must Exist. — Burch v. Hardwicke, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 51; Seele v. State, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 495.

An inferior court is a court whose judgments or decrees can be reviewed by an appellate tribunal, whether that tribunal be the Circuit or the Supreme Court; and not necessarily a court whose jurisdiction is inferior, or limited, within the meaning of that term at common law. Ex p. Roundtree, 51 Ala. 42.

Where the district courts are held by one of the judges of the Supreme Court, the writ may be issued to a judge sitting as a district court judge by a judge of the Supreme Court. Lincoln-Lucky, etc., Min. Co. v. District Ct., 7 N. Mex. 486.

4. Operates Only on Particular Suit or Proceeding. — State v. Ross, 136 Mo. 259; Thomson v. Tracy, 60 N. Y. 31; State v. Moore, 16 Wash. 350.

The court will not issue a prohibition in a case not pending, for the sole purpose of establishing a principle to govern other cases. Sherlock v. Jacksonville, 17 Fla. 93, citing U. S. v. Hoffman, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 158.

A writ prohibiting the trial of a case before an alleged illegal jury is not violated by the trial of such case before another and legal jury. State v. Superior Ct., 16 Wash. 347.

A prohibition against an injunction is violated where the lower court proceeds to punish as a contempt the violation of such injunction. State v. Judge, 48 La. Ann. 1501.

binding upon a subsequent appeal from the judgment in the principal case.¹

The Writ, Even if Improvidently Granted, must not be disregarded by an officer to whom or a tribunal to which it is directed, but must be obeyed until vacated or set aside by some regular course of proceedings.²

Disobedience of the Writ is punishable as a contempt.³ Where the disobedience is in good faith, and not wilful, such good faith, though it cannot wholly excuse the technical contempt, will preclude other punishment than by a nominal fine.⁴

VI. PARTICULAR PERSONS AND ACTS PROHIBITED — 1. In General. — Having in view the general principles already considered, the writ has been granted or refused, as stated, in the following classes of cases, viz.:

2. Amendments. — Error in permitting or refusing to permit amendments is not ground for the writ.⁵

3. Amount in Controversy. — Where the jurisdiction of the court depends upon the amount in controversy, prohibition lies to prevent the exercise of jurisdiction in a case where the amount is not such as to confer jurisdiction.⁶ Thus, where a single cause of action has been improperly split in order to confer jurisdiction upon an inferior court,⁷ or to defeat the jurisdiction of a superior court,⁸ it has been held that the writ lies.

4. Appeal and Error — Entertaining Appeal. — The writ lies to prevent a court from entertaining an appeal in cases where no appeal is allowed by law,⁹ or where the steps necessary to confer jurisdiction on the appellate court have not been taken.¹⁰ But mere defects or irregularities in the proceedings which are not jurisdictional are not ground for the writ.¹¹

A denial of an application for a writ of prohibition without deciding the question of jurisdiction does not take away the right to have such question considered on a writ of review. Santa Monica v. Eckert, (Cal. 1893) 33 Pac. Rep. 880.

Writ of Error Sued Out in Time. — In State v. Smith, 104 Mo. 419, the writ was sought upon the ground that the Kansas City Court of Appeals was entertaining a suit where the writ of error was sued out after the expiration of the time allowed by law, but the Supreme

Proceedings Pending Appeal. — The writ lies to prevent further proceedings in a cause after an appeal and supersedeas,¹ but not when the appeal is without supersedeas,² nor, it has been held, where an appeal is attempted to be taken in a case where no appeal lies.³ Of course, a court has power to proceed pending an appeal upon any matter in the cause not affected by the appeal.⁴

After Judgment by the Appellate Court, the court appealed from has authority only to enforce the judgment as rendered, and the writ will be granted to prevent it from attempting to enforce a different judgment.⁵ The writ lies to prevent the lower court from vacating or modifying a judgment rendered by the Supreme Court on appeal.⁶ But it does not lie to compel a lower court to follow the decisions of the Supreme Court in other but similar cases.⁷ The writ lies to prevent the vacation of a judgment and new trial after affirmance of the judgment on appeal.⁸

5. Appointment of Officers. — The appointment of officers is not usually a judicial act and cannot be restrained by prohibition.⁹

6. Attachment. — Prohibition will not lie to restrain proceedings in attachment upon the ground that the action is one in which no attachment will lie, there being a remedy by appeal from an order refusing to dissolve the Court held that, the case belonging to the general class of actions of which the city court had jurisdiction, the question whether the writ of error was issued "in the time, manner, or form allowed by law was one peculiarly for it to determine," and the writ was denied. As a Judgment of Ouster in a Quo Warranto Proceeding is self-executing and is not suspended by appeal, prohibition will not lie to prevent the enforcement of such judgment by contempt proceedings pending the appeal. Fawcett v. Santa Barbara County, 52 Cal. 622, it was held on demurrer to an application for prohibition that the board of supervisors could not proceed to elect the petitioner's successor as sheriff, when he had appealed from the judgment of the District Court ousting him from office.

attachment.¹ Insufficiency of the affidavit in attachment is not ground for a writ of prohibition to restrain the court from proceeding with the case.²

7. Attorney-General. — The attorney-general, in determining what proceedings shall be commenced, acts ministerially and is not subject to the writ.³

8. Commissioners. — State land commissioners, in selling or leasing public lands, do not act judicially and are not subject to the writ.⁴ Railroad commissioners,⁵ and commissioners to adopt plans and specifications for the erection of a state capitol,⁶ have been held subject to the writ under particular circumstances.

9. Condemnation Proceedings. — County commissioners, in determining the damages to be paid in condemnation proceedings, act judicially and are subject to the writ.⁷

10. Conflicting and Concurrent Jurisdiction. — Where a court of competent jurisdiction has assumed cognizance of a cause, it has been held that other courts of concurrent jurisdiction are thereby deprived of it in respect to that cause, and may be restrained by prohibition.⁸ But this has been denied upon the ground that both courts concededly have jurisdiction and that its exercise by one is at most error.⁹

11. Contempt Proceedings. — The writ lies to prevent or arrest contempt proceedings where the particular officer has, under the circumstances, no jurisdiction to punish for contempt,¹⁰ but not where jurisdiction exists,¹¹ or where there is another adequate remedy.¹²

12. Continuance. — An erroneous continuance of a case to the next term is not ground for the writ.¹³

Although a judicial proceeding must ultimately be dismissed for want of jurisdiction, yet the court has power to punish a stranger for contempt of its orders made during the progress of the case, and, therefore, prohibition will not lie to prevent the enforcement of contempt proceedings. Ex p. Stickney, 40 Ala. 160.

The fact that the petitioner claims that the justice is prejudiced against him is not sufficient ground for granting a writ of prohibition restraining the justice from taking further action in contempt proceedings. People v. Williams, 51 N. Y. App. Div. 102.

13. Controller. — A controller is not a judicial officer, and is not subject to be restrained by a writ of prohibition.¹

14. Coroner. — The writ lies to a coroner to prevent him from holding an inquest as to the origin of a fire.²

15. Courts Martial. — A military or naval court-martial is subject to the writ when it is proceeding in excess of its jurisdiction,³ but the writ will not be granted upon the ground of errors or irregularities in the proceedings or for insufficiency of the charges or specifications.⁴

16. Court-room. — The writ lies to prevent the enforcement of an order to the sheriff to complete and furnish a court-room for the use of the court, there being no statutory authority for such an order.⁵

17. Costs. — An irregular taxation of costs is not ground for a writ of prohibition.⁶ But a wholly unauthorized judgment for costs may be prohibited.⁷

18. Defenses. — The writ will not lie to prevent a court from entertaining a case merely because there is a clear defense to the proceeding.⁸

19. Discretionary Acts. — If the inferior tribunal has the jurisdiction or power to take the contemplated action under any circumstances as a judicial or discretionary act, the writ will not lie. It is only where the inferior tribunal is about to do some act wholly unauthorized by law that the writ will lie.⁹

20. Dismissal or Withdrawal of Proceedings. — Where proceedings have been dismissed, prohibition lies to prevent further proceedings therein.¹⁰ Prohibition lies to restrain a court from trying a criminal cause after the district attorney has entered a nolle prosequi therein.¹¹ The writ will not lie to prevent a court from passing upon a motion to dismiss.¹²

A dismissal by the plaintiff will not defeat the jurisdiction of the court where a counterclaim has been filed by the defendant. Walcott v. Wells, 21 Nev. 47, 37 Am. St. Rep. 478, holding that the lower court has the right to determine whether the counterclaim was filed before or after a dismissal.

12. Motion to Dismiss. — Wreden v. Superior Ct., 55 Cal. 504.

21. Disregard of Statute or Common Law. — Proceedings by a court in violation of direct statutory provisions are in excess of jurisdiction and may be restrained by a writ of prohibition.¹ It is sometimes said that prohibition will lie where a court proceeds in violation of the settled principles of the common law. But this is not true unless taken with considerable qualification.²

22. Disqualification of Judge. — A writ of prohibition will lie to restrain a judge from proceeding in an action in which he is disqualified by reason of interest, although the court over which he presides may have jurisdiction of the cause.³

23. Drawing Warrants. — The writ will not lie to prevent the drawing of warrants upon the public treasury in payment of claims.⁴

24. Elections. — A board of election officers may exercise both ministerial and judicial powers, in which case the writ of prohibition will lie as to their judicial action, but not as to their ministerial action.⁵ The writ will not lie to arrest the proceedings of a board of election commissioners in ordering an election, as their action is not judicial.⁶

25. Equitable Proceedings. — The writ, although a legal remedy, lies to prevent proceedings either at law or in equity.⁷ Gross abuse of discretion in granting equitable remedies may be restrained by prohibition.⁸

26. Evidence. — Error in the reception or rejection of evidence, or insufficiency of the evidence to support the decision, is not ground for prohibition.⁹ Error in failing to examine witnesses under oath upon a preliminary examination is not ground for a writ of prohibition, as it does not affect the question of jurisdiction.¹⁰

27. Examining Magistrates. — An examining magistrate acts judicially and is subject to the writ.¹

28. Excessive Sentence. — The writ lies to arrest an excessive sentence rendered in excess of the court's jurisdiction.²

29. Executions. — The writ will not lie to prevent the issuance of an execution, or to prevent or quash proceedings upon a void or voidable execution, since such action is ministerial and not judicial.³

30. Former Jeopardy. — Prohibition will not lie to prevent a second trial, conviction, or punishment for the same offense, since a former conviction or acquittal is a defense to the merits and not to the jurisdiction.⁴

31. Garnishment Proceedings. — The writ lies to restrain a court from entertaining garnishment proceedings where no jurisdiction has been obtained over the principal defendant.⁵

32. Governor of State. — The writ will not lie against the governor of a state.⁶

33. Habeas Corpus. — The writ lies to prohibit a judicial officer not having jurisdiction from entertaining jurisdiction of an application for and the issuance of a writ of habeas corpus.⁷

35. Illegal Grand Jury. — The writ lies to prevent the trial of indictments presented by an illegal grand jury.⁹

36. Incorporation of Village. — There is conflict of authority as to whether prohibition lies to a court acting in a special proceeding for the incorporation of a village.¹⁰

1. Examining Magistrates. — State v. Arnault, 50 La. Ann. 1; State v. Keyes, 75 Wis. 288.

A United States Commissioner acting as an examining magistrate is a mere officer of the court and subject to the control of the court, but a writ of prohibition directed to him will not lie. U. S. v. Berry, 4 Fed. Rep. 779.

2. Excessive Sentence. — State v. Allen, 47 La. Ann. 1600; State v. Moultrieville, Rice L. (S. Car.) 158.

3. Executions. — Atkins v. Siddons, 66 Ala. 453; Ex p. Braudlacht, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 367, 38 Am. Dec. 593.

Contra. — The enforcement by execution of an unauthorized judgment for costs may be arrested by prohibition. Charleston v. Beller, 45 W. Va. 44.

4. Former Jeopardy. — U. S. v. Maney, 61 Fed. Rep. 140; Arnett v. Superior Ct., (Cal. 1900) 60 Pac. Rep. 534, 128 Cal. xviii.; State v. Evans, 88 Wis. 255; State v. Braun, 31 Wis. 600.

Contra. — Ex p. Brown, 2 Bailey L. (S. Car.) 323, cited with approval in State v. Ridgell, 2 Bailey L. (S. Car.) 560.

5. Garnishment. — McCloskey v. Judge, 26 Mich. 100.

6. Governor. — Greir v. Taylor, 4 McCord L. (S. Car.) 206, 17 Am. Dec. 731; People v. Doyle, 162 N. Y. 659, affirming 44 N. Y. App. Div. 402, holding that prohibition will not lie to prevent the governor from approving or disapproving the findings of the military board of examination as to the character and fitness of officers of the national guard. Greir v. Taylor, 4 McCord L. (S. Car.) 206, 17 Am. Dec. 731, holding that prohibition will not lie against the governor to restrain him from granting a commission to an officer who has been improperly elected.

But it seems that the governor, in investigating charges against officers with a view of removing them from office, acts judicially, and may be restrained by prohibition if he acts without jurisdiction. See Chapman v. Stone-man, 63 Cal. 490, wherein a writ of prohibition was refused solely upon the ground that under the constitution the governor had jurisdiction to proceed with the investigation.

For a general discussion of the constitutional question as to the power of the courts to control the executive by means of mandamus, prohibition, or other remedies, see the title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, vol. 6, p. 882, and the title MANDAMUS, vol. 19, p. 709.

Car.) 38; Ex p. Withers, 3 Brev. (S. Car.) 83; People v. McCue, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 747.

9. Illegal Grand Jury. — Bruner v. Superior Ct., 92 Cal. 239; Levy v. Wilson, 69 Cal. 106. See also Terrill v. Superior Ct., (Cal. 1899) 60 Pac. Rep. 38, (Cal. 1900) 60 Pac. Rep. 516. But see People v. District Ct., (Colo. 1901) 66 Pac. Rep. 1068.

10. Incorporation of Village. — In In re Schumaker, 90 Wis. 488, an application was made for a writ of prohibition to stay a special proceeding before a circuit judge for the incorporation of a village on the ground that the statute authorizing the incorporation of villages was unconstitutional, because it at-

37. Injunction. — The writ lies to prevent the illegal granting of an injunction or to restrain further proceedings in such case.¹ But the writ will not lie to prevent the issuance or enforcement of an injunction which a court of equity had jurisdiction to grant.² Nor will the writ be granted where there is an adequate remedy by appeal³ or certiorari.⁴

38. Insolvency and Bankruptcy. — The writ lies to probate courts proceeding in insolvency.⁵ An order of stay in insolvency proceedings does not deprive other courts of jurisdiction over actions against the insolvent, and though it may be error to proceed in violation of such order, prohibition will not lie.⁶

39. Judgment Without Trial. — Where the court has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter of an action, error in rendering judgment in favor of one of the parties without a trial is neither without nor in excess of its jurisdiction, although it might be erroneous, and therefore prohibition will not lie.⁷

40. Jury Trial. — The writ will not lie to prevent a court from proceeding to try a case without a jury, this being a mere error as to the mode of procedure, and not jurisdictional.⁸

41. Licenses. — The writ does not lie to prevent a municipal corporation from issuing licenses, since it does not act as a judicial body in such matter.⁹ An excise commissioner, exercising statutory authority to revoke a liquor license, is not a judicial officer, and hence not subject to the writ.¹⁰

42. Military Board. — A military board acting simply in an advisory capacity to the governor is not subject to the writ.¹¹

43. Municipal Aid to Railroad. — A county judge, in acting upon a petition to extend municipal aid to a railway, acts judicially, and may be restrained by prohibition.¹²

44. Municipal Corporations. — Ordinarily the writ will not lie to restrain the tempted to confer upon the court legislative power. The writ was refused, but upon the ground that there was no extreme necessity for its issuance, because the remedies at law were adequate. In a precisely similar case the writ was granted. See State v. Simons, 32 Minn. 540. But see Bloxton v. McWhorter, 46 W. Va. 32, wherein it was held that the court, in entering an order directing the incorporation of a town, performs a ministerial duty, so that prohibition will not lie.

action of the common council of a city, since it is not a judicial body.¹ Thus, the passing of an ordinance by a municipal body is not a judicial act and cannot be restrained by prohibition.² But the mayor of a city, or a city council, in the hearing of charges and removal of officers act judicially and may be restrained by prohibition from exceeding their jurisdiction.³ So the common council of a city and its committees, in passing upon claims presented against the city, act judicially and may be restrained by prohibition.⁴ The writ lies to restrain the board of aldermen of a city from proceeding to widen a street and assess betterments.⁵

45. New Trial. — The writ lies to prevent the granting of a new trial after the expiration of the time fixed by law within which a new trial may be granted,⁶ or where for some other reason there is no authority to grant a new trial.⁷

46. Official Bonds. — The writ lies to prohibit the unauthorized action of a district court in requiring a new or additional official bond.⁸

47. Parties. — An objection to the right of the plaintiff to maintain the suit does not raise a jurisdictional question and is not ground for a writ of prohibition.⁹ But the writ has been granted to prohibit special statutory proceedings by parties who, under the statute, had no right to institute them.¹⁰

48. Pleadings. — If the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter or class of actions to which the particular action belongs, the writ of prohibition will not issue, based merely upon the insufficiency of the pleadings or proof to maintain the cause of action.¹¹ Error in rulings on objections made to pleadings is not ground for the writ.¹

49. Process — Want of Service. — Prohibition lies to arrest proceedings against persons who have not been served with process.²

Error or Insufficiency in the process or service thereof is not ground for prohibition, but the remedy is by appeal.³ Error in proceeding upon service by publication in a case where personal service is necessary is not ground for a writ, as the question is primarily within the jurisdiction of the court, and there is an adequate remedy by appeal.⁴

Restraining Service. — The writ will not lie to restrain a ministerial officer from executing process in his hands.⁵

50. Prohibition. — The unauthorized issuance of a writ of prohibition by an inferior court may be restrained by a writ of prohibition from a superior court.⁶

51. Receivers. — A receiver is a ministerial officer to whom the writ will not lie.⁷ The writ lies to prevent the illegal appointment of a receiver or to restrain further proceedings in such case.⁸ But the writ will not lie where the court has jurisdiction both of the parties and subject-matter,⁹ nor where the appointment can result in no injury to the applicant, his rights being fully protected under the order,¹ nor where there is an adequate remedy by appeal or otherwise.²

52. Referees. — A referee exercising substantially all the powers of a court is subject to the writ.³ Referees appointed under a statute to hear and determine the question of a right of way are judicial officers and may be restrained by the writ of prohibition.⁴

53. Removal of Causes. — The writ will not lie to prevent further proceedings in a case properly removed from a state to a federal court, there being an adequate remedy by certiorari from the federal to the state court in such case.⁵

54. Rules of Court. — The writ lies to prevent the enforcement of a rule of court which the lower court had no power to establish.⁶

55. Schools. — Boards of education in the management and control of schools are ministerial and not judicial officers, and not subject to the writ.⁷ But in proceedings to revoke a teacher's certificate,⁸ or in a trial of charges against a school superintendent,⁹ the tribunal acts judicially, and may be confined within its jurisdiction by prohibition. A board of arbitration, in determining the formation of a school district, acts judicially and is subject to the writ.¹⁰

56. Special Judge. — Error or irregularity in the proceedings for the appointment of a special judge is not ground for a writ of prohibition.¹¹

57. Statutory Proceedings. — In a special proceeding provided by statute, not according to the course of the common law, in order to invest the court with jurisdiction, the requisites of the statute must be complied with, and it must so appear on the face of the record. If not so complied with, the court has no jurisdiction to proceed, and prohibition will lie.¹² But mere errors, omissions, or irregularities in a statutory proceeding are insufficient to authorize the issuance of the writ when they do not go to the jurisdiction.¹³

58. Taxation. — The writ will not lie to officers or boards to restrain them from levying or collecting taxes, since the levy of a tax is a ministerial and not a judicial act.¹⁴

59. Termination of Jurisdiction by Final Order. — Where a court has no jurisdiction over its final judgments or decrees, further proceedings may be restrained by prohibition.¹ But the writ will not lie where the court has such jurisdiction.²

60. Territorial Limits of Jurisdiction. — Where a judge is acting outside the limits of his territorial jurisdiction, or where the parties or subject-matter are beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the court, prohibition lies to arrest the proceedings,³ except where there is another adequate remedy by change of venue, appeal, error, or certiorari.⁴

61. Title to Property. — Questions of title to property can rarely, if ever, be tried upon an application for a writ of prohibition.⁵

62. Title to Office. — Prohibition will not lie to try the title to an office or to restrain a de facto officer from acting solely upon the ground that he is not the de jure officer.⁶ The writ lies to prevent a court from proceeding to try a contest for an office, where the exclusive power to determine such contests is vested in the common council of a city.⁷

In Pennington v. Woolfolk, 79 Ky. 13, the writ was issued to prevent the County Court from assessing property not assessed, the act providing for such assessment being held unconstitutional. This use of the writ, however, is expressly authorized by statute in Kentucky.

63. Usurpation of Judicial Power. — The writ lies to prevent unauthorized persons from usurping judicial power and acting as a court without authority of law.¹ Such a case arises where the pretended court was never legally or constitutionally organized.²

64. Venue. — Where the court has jurisdiction both of the person and the subject-matter, an objection to the venue is not ground for a writ of prohibition, as a remedy may be had by motion for a change of venue.³ But where the objection to venue goes to the jurisdiction, the writ will lie.⁴ Error in refusing to change the place of trial or to send the case to another judge or justice for trial is not ground for the writ.⁵ But where a defendant is given by statute the right to remove a suit against him to the county of his residence, and applies for removal in the manner prescribed, the court cannot retain jurisdiction of the suit after the application, and prohibition will lie to prevent it from taking any other step than to certify the case to the right county.⁶ Proceedings under a void order for a change of venue may be restrained by prohibition.⁷

65. Void Judgments and Decrees. — The writ lies to prohibit the enforcement of a void decree, from which no appeal will lie.⁸

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE. — A promoter is a person who takes such preliminary steps in the formation of a corporation as to bring himself into a fiduciary relation thereto, analogous to that of trustee and cestui que trust.¹

1. Definitions. — "A promoter is a person who brings about the incorporation and organization of a corporation. He brings together the persons who become interested in the enterprise, aids in procuring subscriptions, and sets in motion the machinery which leads to the formation of the corporation itself." Cook on Stock and Stockholders, § 651, adopted by the courts in Ex-Mission Land, etc., Co. v. Flash, 97 Cal. 610; Dickerman v. Northern

Trust Co., 176 U. S. 203; Bosher v. Richmond, etc., Land Co., 89 Va. 455, 37 Am. St. Rep. 879.

"While the term 'promoter' may not be capable of precise definition, yet, as usually understood, it has reference to the persons who undertake to form and set going a company with reference to a given project." First Ave. Land Co. v. Hildebrand, 103 Wis. 530. See further New Sombrero Phosphate Co. v. Erlanger, 5 Ch. D. 118; Ladywell Min. Co. v.

Promoters are often referred to, especially in the English cases, as "projectors," "agents," "stewards," or "trustees;" but whatever the term applied it means one who acts in the formation, establishment, and control of a company prior to the incorporation and the assumption of control by the board of directors.¹

Question of Fact. — Whether a person is or is not a promoter is a question of fact and not of law, and must in each case be determined with due regard to all the circumstances.²

II. WHEN PROMOTER BEGINS AND CEASES TO BE SUCH. — As the Acts of Promotion Are a Part of a Series of Acts embracing things done both before and after incorporation, it becomes important to determine at what point of time a promoter becomes such and ceases to be such. In answering the question the courts have applied as a test, the existence of a fiduciary relationship between the promoter and the subsequent company.³

Contemplation of Incorporation. — It is not enough to make one a promoter that when he bought the property he contemplated forming the company which should take it off his hands, no matter how soon after the purchase the company was formed.⁴

Even Where the Promoter Becomes a Director of the company and sells to it property purchased by him two years prior to the formation of the company, it has been held that he could not be treated as having purchased on behalf of the company, since when he acquired his interest he occupied no trust or fiduciary relationship thereto. It seems, however, that rescission of the contract of purchase would be allowed in such a case if asked for in time.⁵

Agreement to Buy Patent. — Nor is one necessarily a promoter of a company who agrees to buy a patent to be paid for partly in cash, and partly in shares of a company which he intends to form to own and operate it; hence an increase in the price of the patent, between the purchase and the sale thereof to the company, is permissible.⁶

Syndicate Buying with Express Purpose of Transferring to Company. — On the other hand it has been held that members of a syndicate which buys property with the express purpose of transferring it to the company are promoters of the company and stand in a fiduciary relation to it, and are bound to make a full and fair disclosure of their interest.⁷

Valuable and suggestive articles on promoters may be found in 16 Am. L. Rev. 281, 671.

1. A Term of Business. — It has been asserted that the term "promoter" is a term not of law, but of business, usually summing up in a single word a number of business operations familiar to the commercial world by which a company is generally brought into existence. Whaley Bridge Calico Printing Co. v. Green, 5 Q. B. D. 109, 49 L. J. Q. B. D. 326, 41 L. T. N. S. 674, 28 W. R. 351.

2. Question of Fact. — Bagnall v. Carlton, 6 Ch. D. 371, 47 L. J. Ch. 30, 37 L. T. N. S. 481, 26 W. R. 243; Emma Silver Min. Co. v. Grant, 11 Ch. D. 918, 40 L. T. N. S. 804; Whaley Bridge Calico Printing Co. v. Green, 5 Q. B. D. 109.

The Term Ambiguous. — It has also been said that the word is ambiguous, and that it is necessary to ascertain in each case what the so-called promoter really did, before his legal liabilities can be accurately ascertained, and that in every case it is better to look at the facts and ascertain and describe them as they are. Lydney, etc., Iron Ore Co. v. Bird, 33 Ch. D. 93, 24 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 24; In re Hess Mfg. Co., 21 Ont. App. 66.

3. When a Promoter Begins and Ceases to Be Such. — In re Ambrose Lake Tin, etc., Min. Co., 14 Ch. D. 398. But see contra, Pittsburg Min. Co. v. Spooner, 74 Wis. 307, 17 Am. St. Rep. 149, 24 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 1.

4. Contemplation of Incorporation Not Enough. — In re Coal Economising Gas Co., 1 Ch. D. 182, L. R. 20 Eq. 114; Ladywell Min. Co. v. Brookes, 35 Ch. D. 400; Lydney, etc., Iron Ore Co. v. Bird, 33 Ch. D. 85; In re Hess Mfg. Co., 21 Ont. App. 66.

5. In re Cape Breton Co., 29 Ch. D. 795.

6. In re Coal Economising Gas Co., 1 Ch. D. 182, Mellish and Brett, JJ., dissenting.

When He Ceases to Be Such. — While ordinarily a promoter would cease to be such when the corporation is fully formed and the business turned over to the directors, such is not necessarily the case. The promoter may continue to dominate, and the directors selected by him, although legally the agents of the corporation, may be but the passive instruments of the promoter. So long as the work of formation continues, those who carry on that work must retain the character of promoters.¹

III. PROMOTERS DISTINGUISHED FROM AGENTS. — The attempt has often been made to hold the company subsequently formed liable upon contracts of promoters upon the theory of agency; but it has been pointed out that a promoter is not an agent strictly, since an agent must have a principal in existence at the time the services as agent are performed; whereas the corporation for which the promoter acts does not come into existence until after many, or possibly all, of the acts of the promoter have been performed.² It has been held, however, that the strict rule of law may be so modified in courts of equity as to permit the application to a promoter of the principles of the laws of agency and trusteeship.³

Theory of Continuing Offer. — The gap existing between the subscription to the stock of a non-existent corporation, and a subsequent attempt by the corporation to enforce such subscription, has been bridged over by the theory that such subscription is in the nature of a continuing offer to the proposed corporation, which, upon acceptance by it after its formation, becomes as to each subscriber a contract between him and the corporation, aided by the further doctrine that the promoter who obtains the subscriptions occupies the position of agent for the subscribers as a body to hold the subscriptions until the corporation is formed in accordance with the terms and conditions expressed in the agreement, and then to turn them over to the company without any further act of delivery on the part of the subscribers. The corporation in this way becomes a party able to enforce the rights of the whole body of subscribers.⁴

IV. RELATION OF PROMOTER TO COMPANY PROMOTED. — From the definitions above given, it will be clearly seen that the important fact in connection with promoters is the relation of trust and confidence, denoted by the term "fiduciary," in which they stand to the company promoted. This idea is repeated with emphasis in nearly all the cases.⁵

1. May Be Promoter Even After Incorporation. — Twycross v. Grant, 2 C. P. D. 540; Russell v. Rock Run Fuel Gas Co., 184 Pa. St. 107, 41 W. N. C. (Pa.) 364, 7 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. N. S. 456.

Relation May Arise Subsequently. — Although there may be no confidential or fiduciary relation between the promoters of the corporation at the time the property subsequently sold to the corporation is bought by them, still they may afterwards place themselves in a fiduciary relation to the corporation by promoting it in such a way as to preclude their making secret profits upon the property conveyed.¹

When the Relation Is Not Fiduciary. — Where the promoters who formed the corporation and sold their property to it are themselves the sole members of the corporation and hold all the bonds or stock, they simply sell as individuals, and buy as a corporation; and the doctrine of fiduciary relationship has been held not to apply to such a case.²

V. DUTY OF PROMOTERS TO COMPANY PROMOTED — 1. In General. — Because of the fiduciary relation in which a promoter stands to his company, similar to that of agent or trustee, the courts have extended to the former the general principles of law applicable to the latter.

2. Duty to Disclose Interest. — A promoter who sells to his company his own property, or that of a third person whom he represents as agent, is bound to disclose to the officers and to the subscribers to the stock his interest and position in respect to such property, and all facts relating thereto which would naturally influence those whose duty it is to decide upon the desirability of the purchase.³

Cannot Retain Secret Profits. — But in the absence of a full disclosure of the fact that he is making secret profits not shared by those whose interests he represents, he will not be allowed to retain them, and his attempt to do so gives rise to various remedies on the part of the company or the subscribers.⁴

In view of the familiar doctrine that a corporation is an entity distinct from its constituent members, it is not clear why the doctrine of fiduciary relationship should not apply in the case instanced in the text. It would seem that any one who subsequently purchased the securities of the company should be allowed to call in question the good faith and honesty of those who sold the company its property. See Society for Illustration of Practical Knowledge v. Abbott, 2 Beav. 559; Pittsburg Min. Co. v. Spooner, 74 Wis. 307, 17 Am. St. Rep. 149.

May Sell at a Profit. — There is nothing in the relation existing between the promoter and the company which prevents him from selling to the company, when formed, either his own property at any profit which he may be able to obtain over and above the cost, or the property of another at any commission which the vendor is willing to allow him, provided all these facts and figures be communicated to those interested and acquiesced in by them. All that is demanded is that he make a full and fair disclosure of his interest in the property sold. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. v. Erlanger, 5 Ch. D. 118; Ladywell Min. Co. v. Brookes, 35 Ch. D. 400; In re Hess Mfg. Co., 21 Ont. App. 66; Lungren v. Pennell, 10 W. N. C. (Pa.) 297.

Must Specify Interest. — It is the duty of a promoter having any interest in a business transaction of the corporation, not only to declare that interest, but to specify the nature of the same. Bagnall v. Carlton, 6 Ch. D. 385.

Remuneration. — If the remuneration of the promoter is provided for by the articles of association, it cannot afterwards be questioned by the stockholders. In re Anglo-Greek Steam Nav., etc., Co., 35 Beav. 399.

3. Duty to Provide Impartial Directors. — Where promoters intend to sell property to the proposed corporation, it is incumbent upon them to provide such company with a board of directors, who shall be made aware that the property which they are asked to buy is the property of the promoters, and who shall be competent and impartial judges as to whether the purchase ought or ought not to be made.¹

4. Cannot Be Both Vendor and Purchaser. — Promoters beneficially interested in the corporation cannot be at the same time sellers and buyers; they cannot sell in one character to themselves in another.²

5. Cannot Accept Secret Commissions. — The same rule forbids a promoter to accept a secret bonus or commission from one who sells property to the company, either in money or by dividing with the vendor stock given in part payment for such property,³ and a prospectus reciting that the company will pay actual costs does not include a commission from the owner of the property to the promoters.⁴ Nor can a promoter claim that he holds such money as an agent of the corporation where it was received by him as vendor of the property to the company.⁵ It is fraudulent for the owners to give to the promoter a document purporting to be an offer made by themselves as owners to sell at a fictitious price, which the promoter is to represent as the real one,⁶ or for promoters to insert their names as vendors, when they have no real interest in the property sold, in order that they may get fully paid-up shares for their services as promoters.⁷

May Retain Legitimate Expenses. — However, in estimating the amount of secret profits for which a promoter is accountable to the company, he has been allowed the legitimate expenses of a promoter; such as the reports of surveyors, services of attorneys and brokers, and advertising.⁸

It Is No Defense to the Charge of Making Secret Profits that the company paid no more for the property than it was really worth;⁹ nor that the corporation obtained in an unlawful way the money which it paid the promoter, as by an illegal issue or sale of its stock to its corporators;¹⁰ nor that the sale was made at a time when the promoters were the only members of the corporation, at least where there are others interested in the formation thereof, but to whom stock has not been allotted.¹

6. Cannot Divide Stock Among Themselves. — The somewhat common custom among promoters of dividing among themselves a certain portion of the shares of stock of the company promoted, upon the principle of "division and silence," is fraudulent, and the surrender of such stock for cancellation may be required unless it has passed into the hands of bona fide purchasers for value;² and the very common bargain between promoters and directors, by which the former agree to give to the latter the necessary shares to qualify them to act as directors upon the condition that the directors return certain of the shares to the promoters, is gross misconduct, and the directors must answer to the company for the real value of the shares given them as a part of the fraudulent arrangement.³ It is equally improper for a promoter to promise a director that his subscription shall be merely nominal, and that he will not be required to pay for the stock,⁴ or that he will be indemnified if the enterprise should prove unprofitable. The value of any such indemnity belongs to the company.⁵

7. Burden of Proof. — Where promoters own most of the stock, control the corporation absolutely, and co-operate with each other in selling land to a company, the burden is upon them to show the fairness of the transaction, and in the absence of such showing the sale of the land will be deemed a fraud, in fact and in law.⁶

VI. LIABILITY OF PROMOTERS UPON THEIR PRE-CORPORATE CONTRACTS — As Agents. — In some instances, where it has been sought to hold promoters personally liable upon contracts made in furtherance of the corporate enterprise, the courts have held them liable as a matter of law, upon the theory that an agent contracting for and in the name of a non-existing principal renders himself liable upon the contract.⁷

As Real Debtors. — A promoter has been held liable further, on the ground that the parties in contracting relied upon the credit of the promoter, and not of the corporation.⁸

As Partners. — It has furthermore been held that where there are several promoters working together for a common end, they may become jointly and severally liable to account as partners, whatever may have been their private intention.⁹

Question for Jury. — In a great majority of the actions brought against the promoter individually, the chief difficulty has been one of evidence. Was the contract intended to bind the promoter or the corporation? The question is one for the jury to determine.¹

Illustrations — Becoming Member of Provisional Committee. — It is practically impossible to formulate any rule as to what facts are or are not sufficient to fasten liability upon the promoter personally. It has, however, been held that the mere fact of a person's agreeing to become a member of the provisional committee of an intended company amounts to no more than a promise that he will act with other persons to carry the scheme into effect, and is not enough to hold him liable upon obligations assumed by a promoter.²

Adoption of Former Proceedings. — But where the actions of a committee-man show that he has sanctioned and adopted former proceedings of a managing committee, in which he did not take part, he may be held liable to contribute to the payment of the obligations thereby assumed.³

On Contract Adopted by Company. — Where a promoter is individually liable for goods bought for the intended company, he may remain liable therefor although the corporation, when formed, adopts the contract for the goods.⁴

The Provisional Committee May Absolve Themselves from Personal Responsibility by resolution to that effect, provided it can be shown that the creditor knew of such resolution, and acquiesced in its effect, and agreed to be bound thereby.⁵

A Resolution Passed at a Meeting of the Provisional Directors, directing the secretary to take the necessary steps to advertise the company, may be sufficient to cast liability upon such directors personally, notwithstanding the fact that they became such under the assurance that they would incur no personal liability for preliminary expenses, unless it is shown that the secretary acted beyond the scope of his actual or apparent authority.⁶

Attendance at a Meeting of the Provisional Committee proves that the party so attending is a member of the committee, but it proves no more. And if he leaves the meeting before a certain resolution is passed, or does not concur in it, he is not liable for any obligation that may be assumed in consequence of such resolution.¹

Contribution Between Promoters. — Provisional committee-men are not liable as partners on transactions entered into by one of them; hence an action at law will lie by one of them for contribution against such of the other committee-men as were liable to pay a debt which the plaintiff has paid.²

VII. REPRESENTATIONS THROUGH PROSPECTUS — 1. Principles of Fraud Control. — Promoters ordinarily bring themselves into relations with the public by means of prospectuses issued to set forth the nature of the enterprise, and to invite subscriptions to the capital stock. The general principles relating to fraud have been applied to such documents.³

Prospectus Should Be Full and Accurate. — It is a general rule that promoters who appeal to the public by these means are bound to state everything with strict and scrupulous accuracy, and not only to abstain from stating as a fact that which is not so, but to omit no one fact within their knowledge the existence of which might in any degree affect the nature or extent or quality of the privileges and advantages which the prospectus holds out as inducements to take shares.⁴

2. What Exaggeration Permissible. — The courts have recognized that in advertisements of this description some allowance must always be made for the sanguine expectations of the promoters of the adventure, and that some high coloring and even exaggeration in the description of the advantages which are likely to be enjoyed may be expected. The same high authority, however, emphasizes the rule that the utmost candor and honesty ought to characterize such public statements, and that no misstatement or concealment of any material facts or circumstances ought to be permitted.⁵ Therefore, a prospectus is held to be fraudulent in which the promoters are not only compelled to hide the truth, but to give such a color to the statement put forth as to render it, while perhaps literally true, yet, in the sense in which they must have known it would be understood by the public, really false.⁶

3. Negligence Not Equivalent to Fraud. — The question whether an action for negligent misrepresentation, as distinguished from fraudulent representation, could be maintained, was, after much controversy, settled in the negative in a leading case in the House of Lords.⁷

Want of Reasonable Ground for the Statements made is not enough to show fraud, but it must be shown that they were made dishonestly, and the onus of proving the dishonesty lies upon the plaintiff.⁸

Asserting Facts Not Known to Be Facts. — The assertion, however, of a fact, as to which the promoter is ignorant whether it is true or untrue, is fraudulent.⁹

Since the decision just referred to, it has been held that a subscriber seeking to rescind his contract of subscription, or to recover money already paid in, must show that there was a fraudulent representation upon which he relied, and not merely an innocent misrepresentation. *Kennedy v. But an Ambiguous Statement which may be either true or false is not false unless the plaintiff can prove that he understood it in the sense which would make it false.¹

4 Prospectus Must Be Proximate Cause of Injury. — It is a general principle that "to render a man responsible for the consequences of a false representation made by him to another, upon which a third person acts, and so acting is injured or damnified, it must appear that such false representation was made with the direct intent that it should be acted upon by such third person in the manner that occasions the injury or loss."² Hence, it has been held that the plaintiff seeking to recover must show that he saw the prospectus and was induced thereby, to some extent at least, to invest in the proposed venture.³

Prospectus as Part of Fraudulent Scheme. — And where a false prospectus has been issued, and subsequently a false representation is made in a newspaper, a plaintiff who subscribed upon the latter representation has been held entitled to connect it with the prospectus as a part of a fraudulent scheme, and to hold the promoters liable.⁴

Promoter Liable as Occasion of Loss. — Where the defendants, advertised in a prospectus as directors, were not guilty of direct fraudulent intention, the court applied to them the rule that where one of two innocent parties is to suffer by the fraud of a third, he who gave occasion for the fraud should bear the loss.⁵

5. Companies Act of 1867. — The Companies Act of 1867⁶ provides that "every prospectus of a company, and every notice inviting persons to subscribe for shares in any joint-stock company, shall specify the dates and the names of the parties to any contract entered into by the company, or the promoters, directors, or trustees thereof, before the issue of such prospectus or notice, whether subject to adoption by the directors of the company or otherwise; and any prospectus or notice not specifying the same shall be deemed fraudulent on the part of the promoters, directors, and officers of the company knowingly issuing the same, as regards any person taking shares in the company on the faith of such prospectus, unless he shall have had notice of such contract."⁷

1. Ambiguous Statements. — Smith v. Chadwick, 9 App. Cas. 187. But see Glasier v. Rolls, 42 Ch. D. 436.

2. Prospectus Must Be Proximate Cause of Injury. — Per Wood, V. C., in Barry v. Croskey, 2 Johns. & H. 1, quoted with approval by Lord Cairns in Peek v. Gurney, L. R. 6 H. L. 413.

L. 343; In re Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Assoc., (1892) 3 Ch. 1; Gerhard v. Bates, 2 El. & Bl. 476, 75 E. C. L. 476.

Meaning of Rule. — By this it is not meant that it is necessary that the representations should have been made directly by the defendant to the plaintiff, but it is sufficient that the false representations are contained in a document intended to be circulated among the class of persons likely to be deceived by it. Nor is it necessary that the prospectus should be the sole inducement to the plaintiff's action. Clarke v. Dickson, 6 C. B. N. S. 453, 95 E. C. L. 453; Walker v. Anglo-American Mortg., etc., Co., 72 Hun (N. Y.) 334.

4. Prospectus as Part of Fraudulent Scheme. — Andrews v. Mockford, (1896) 1 Q. B. 378, distinguishing Peek v. Gurney, L. R. 6 H. L. 377.

In In re Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Assoc. (Karberg's Case), (1892) 3 Ch. 1, Lord Justice Lindley makes a distinction between subscribing on the faith of a prospectus issued by the promoters and on that of one issued by the company after its formation. The distinction is between a statement made that so and so was the case and a statement that it was expected that so and so would be the case. The latter statement is not fraudulent if it can be shown that such was the real expectation.

6. English Companies Acts. — 30 & 31 Vict., c. 131, § 38.

7. In construing this statute a difference of opinion has arisen as to what contracts are required to be specified in the prospectus. It was the opinion of Lord Bramwell (Twycross v. Grant, 2 C. P. D. 469) that only those contracts are meant which affect the company, which put an obligation on it whether with or without some benefit attached; contracts made with the company if it has been formed, or with the promoters or directors acting in behalf of the future company with the intent that they shall be ratified.

It was the opinion of Lord Brett (In re Coal Volume XXIII.

VIII. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF COMPANY UNDER CONTRACTS OF PROMOTERS

— 1. Rule at Law. — Regarding promoters in the light of agents of the proposed corporation, the courts applied to them the familiar rule that there can be no agent without an existing principal; with the result that the pre-corporate contracts of promoters were held to impose no duties and to confer no rights upon the corporation subsequently coming into existence. Such was and still is the strict common-law rule when not modified by subsequent adoption or ratification or the application of equitable doctrines.¹

2. Rule in Equity. — The common-law rule just laid down is also the rule in equity where there exist no equitable reasons for modifying it.²

Adopting Contract Cum Onere. — But courts of chancery early adopted the rule that a corporation might, by accepting the benefits of a pre-corporate contract made by its promoters, become bound to discharge the obligations which such contract imposes. It was deemed only equitable that in such a case the corporation should be required to adopt the contract cum onere, taking the burdens with the benefits.³ This doctrine, which is known as that of Lord Cottenham, has been severely criticised by some English judges,⁴ but it has been applied freely in subsequent English cases,⁵ and has been adopted by the American courts, "ex aequo et bono, to prevent fraud and imposition, and to do substantial justice."⁶

Economising Gas Co. (Gover's Case), 1 Ch. D. 200 that the act included every contract made before the issue of the prospectus the knowledge of which might have an effect upon a reasonable subscriber for shares in determining him to give or withhold faith in the promoter, director, or trustee issuing the prospectus, whether such contract was made by such promoter, director, or trustee before or after he became a promoter, director, or trustee, and whether or not such contract was made on behalf of, or so as if adopted to impose a liability on, the company.

The latter opinion seems to be supported by the weight of authority. In re Coal Economising Gas Co., 1 Ch. D. 182; Craig v. Phillips, 3 Ch. D. 722; Arkwright v. Newbold, 17 Ch. 6. In America. — Per Eakin, J., in Little Volume XXIII,

Limitations upon the Rule. — It has been pointed out that not all contracts made with promoters would be binding upon a subsequently formed company, but only those that are made upon the credit of the corporation and with a mutual expectation that the promoters would form a company, and that the company would assume the contract.¹ No rights legal or equitable arise in favor of a corporation in respect to transactions, whether complete or inchoate, merely because entered into in contemplation of the creation of such corporation.² The mere fact that a corporation formed from the members of a prior copartnership and others, has received by transfer the assets of such copartnership, will not charge it with the payment of the debts of the copartnership.³ Only those persons who have done work directly for the proposed corporation can claim the benefit of this principle. Those who are employed by promoters must look to their employers.⁴ Where a plaintiff has failed to maintain his claim on the ground that the company has had the benefit of his services, he may possibly recover upon the ground of a novation of the contract originally made between him and the promoter.⁵

3. Adopting or Ratifying Promoters' Contract. — As a part of the doctrine that a promoter could not as agent bind a non-existing principal, it was held that it was legally impossible for the subsequently formed company to transfer to itself, by adoption or ratification, any inchoate rights or obligations created by the contract of the promoter. There must be, it was argued, two parties to a contract, and the rights and obligations it creates cannot be transferred by one of them to a third person who is not in a condition to be bound by it at the time it was made.⁶ The great weight of authority, however, recognizes the power and the right of the corporation when formed to adopt or ratify the pre-corporate contracts of its promoters. The more modern cases claim to see no difference between the corporation making a contract by adopting an agreement originally made in advance for it by promoters, and the making of an entirely new contract. No greater formality is necessary in the one case than in the other.⁷

Election. — Since a contract of a promoter is not binding until adopted, the

In Davis, etc., Bldg., etc., Co. v. Hillsboro Creamery Co., 10 Ind. App. 44, it was held that the simple acceptance of the benefits of a contract, without adoption or promise to be bound by it, would not make the corporation liable.

And in Rockford, etc., R. Co. v. Sage, 65 Ill. 332, 16 Am. Rep. 587, the court questioned the right to recover on the sole ground of acceptance of benefits, but was disposed to think that this circumstance, coupled with an express promise, would warrant recovery.

corporation is clearly at liberty to refuse to adopt it, and may resist an action for specific performance, certainly in a case where it has not accepted the consideration and taken the benefit.¹

Individual Liability. — On the other hand, the subscribers may be personally liable where, after the act of incorporation is passed, they signed an agreement assuming liability.²

Contracts Authorized by Act of Incorporation. — While a corporation must be completely organized before it can enter into a contract, the act of incorporation may authorize the incorporators to make contracts which will bind the company when it shall have been organized.³

4. Kinds of Contracts that May Be Adopted. — But there is a limitation to this power of adoption. The kind of promoter's contract that a corporation may adopt is only such as the corporation itself could make, and one which the usual agents of the company have express or implied authority to make.⁴ It must also be one within the purposes for which the corporation was organized, and must appear to be a reasonable means of carrying out those purposes.⁵ Hence a contract that is ultra vires can no more be adopted, than it can be originally made by the corporation.⁶ The contract must also have been one made primarily for the benefit of the corporation.⁷ And in a few jurisdictions it must be one made by a majority of the promoters, since a minority has no authority to bind a corporation.⁸ But it would seem that the qualification is unnecessary if, as has been held, the contract after adoption acquires its force and extent from the act of adoption and not from the agreement of the promoter.¹

5. Adoption Inferred from Corporate Acts. — The adoption of the promoter's contract by the subsequently formed corporation need not be expressed, but may be inferred from the acts and general conduct of the corporation in relation to the subject-matter of the contract.²

Evidence of Adoption. — Where the acts of the corporation tend strongly to show adoption, the question should be determined by a jury.³ The acceptance of benefits under the contract has been held to be one of the clearest indications of an intention to adopt it.⁴

Express Promise Sometimes Required. — It has been doubted, however, whether the acceptance of the benefit of a contract without a subsequent express promise to perform would be sufficient. The court has refused to allow recovery upon an implied promise, holding it more reasonable to conclude that any services performed prior to the organization of the corporation were gratuitous, and rendered in view of the general good or private benefit expected to result.⁵

a pre-corporate contract is mentioned, is not sufficient evidence of ratification thereof.¹

Corporation Estopped. — Such acts as those enumerated, and others, constitute equitable estoppel as against the corporation.²

PROMOTION. (See also the title LOTTERIES, vol. 19, p. 588.) — See note 3.

PROMPT. — The word "prompt" is defined to mean ready; quick; expeditious; done or rendered quickly or immediately.⁴ Prompt is synonymous with "quick;" "sudden;" "precipitate." Indeed, one who is ready is said to be prepared at the moment; one who is prompt is said to be prepared beforehand.⁵

PROMPTLY. — Promptly is defined to mean quickly; expeditiously.⁶

PROMULGATION. — See note 7.

PRONOUNCE. — To pronounce means to utter formally, officially, or solemnly; to declare or affirm; as, to utter formally and solemnly the judgment of a court.⁸

PROOF. (See also the titles BURDEN OF PROOF, vol. 5, p. 21; EVIDENCE, vol. 11, p. 484; REASONABLE DOUBT, post.) — I. Proof has been defined to be the logically sufficient reason for assenting to the truth of a proposition advanced.⁹ The terms "proof" and "evidence" are often used indifferently

1. Tift v. Quaker City Nat. Bank, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 606, 47 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 308.

2. Corporation Estopped. — McArthur v. Times Printing Co., 48 Minn. 321, 31 Am. St. Rep. 653.

3. Promotion of Lottery. — In Miler v. Com., 13 Bush (Ky.) 731, it was held that the term promotion, as applied to a lottery, included any act as manager or as agent of those managing a lottery, or by inducing others to buy tickets or chances in the lottery. See also Com. v. Rose, (Ky. 1900) 54 S. W. Rep. 863.

4. Prompt. — McKnight v. Whipple, 25 Colo. 469, quoting Webst. Dict.

5. Tobias v. Lissberger, 105 N. Y. 412, 59 Am. Rep. 509.

A wholesale merchant replied to an order for goods that "the same shall have prompt attention." In construing this reply, the court said: "The operative words are 'attention' and prompt. The latter, when read in connection with the term of the proposal, that the shoes should be shipped on the succeeding 15th of June, signifies and was intended to signify no more than that attention would be given in time to meet this term. If given within that time, it was as speedy as the nature or necessities of the transaction required." Manier v. Appling, 112 Ala. 668.

6. Promptly. — Denver v. Moewes, 15 Colo. App. 28, in which case it was held that it was error to instruct a jury in an action for damages for personal injuries, alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiff through the negligence of the defendant, that it was the duty of the city to repair promptly an alleged defect in a street after the city had knowledge of its existence. The court said: "The city might fail to repair a defect promptly, and at the same time might use such reasonable diligence in discharging the duty as would relieve it from liability for accident." See also the title STREETS AND SIDEWALKS.

7. Promulgation. — The law of master and servant requires that proper rules for the government of a servant shall be promulgated by the master. See the title MASTER AND SERVANT, vol. 20, p. 102. Upon the meaning of promulgation, as thus used, the court said in Wooden v. Western New York, etc., R. Co., (Buffalo Super. Ct. Gen. T.) 18 N. Y. Supp. 769: "Promulgation is to make known. It means that such rule shall be brought to the attention of the servants affected thereby, or that it be given such publicity as that the servant, in the proper discharge of his duties, is bound to take notice of it when knowledge is presumed. If the rule was not upon the bulletin board when deceased entered the employment, then as to him there was no promulgation, and he was not bound to take notice of it; and search is vain to show that he received information from any other source, or from that. Whether this was a proper promulgation of the rule, as to deceased, I think was a question for the jury."

8. Pronounce. — Ex p. Crawford, 36 Tex. Crim. 181.

9. Proof. — Powell v. State, 101 Ga. 9, quoting Black's L. Dict.

"Proof is that quantity of appropriate evidence which produces assurance and certainty." Buffalo, etc., R. Co. v. Reynolds, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 98.

Evidence Before Court or Jury. — "Proof, in strict legal construction, means evidence before a court or jury, in a judicial way." Lenox v. United Ins. Co., 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 225.

Full Proof is evidence which satisfies the mind of the truth of the facts in dispute, to the entire exclusion of every reasonable doubt. Kane v. Hibernia Mut. F. Ins. Co., 38 N. J. L. 450.

Of Proof — Hereof. — A statute required that the oaths of the assessors to an assessment roll should state that they had estimated the value of the real estate in accordance with the judgment of the majority of them, "with the exception of those cases in which the value of said estate has been changed by reason of as synonymous with each other; but the former is applied, by the most accurate logicians, to the effect of evidence, and not to the medium by which truth is established.¹

II. Proof means the act of testing the strength of alcoholic spirits; also the degree of strength, as high proof, first proof, second, third, and fourth proof. In the internal revenue law, it is used in the sense of degree of strength.²

proof produced before us." It appeared that in an oath to an assessment roll of a certain year, instead of the statutory words "of proof" the word "hereof" was inserted. This was held a fatal variance. Shattuck v. Bascomb, 105 N. Y. 40.

1. Proof and Evidence. — 1 Greenleaf on Evidence (16th ed.), § 1. See also Hall v. State, 40 Ala. 707; Schloss v. His Creditors, 31 Cal. 203; Tift v. Jones, 77 Ga. 181; Perry v. Dubuque Southwestern, etc., R. Co., 36 Iowa 106; Jastrzemski v. Marxhausen, 120 Mich. 677; People v. Beckwith, 108 N. Y. 73.

That Proof Is Frequently Used as a Synonym of Evidence, see O'Reilly v. Guardian Mut. L. Ins. Co., 60 N. Y. 173.

In Hill v. Watson, 10 S. Car. 268, the term proof, as used in a South Carolina statute (Acts 1869, p. 214) providing that a judgment might be set aside on "satisfactory proof," was held to be synonymous with "evidence."

Proof Means Competent Evidence. — In Hill v. Hunt, 20 N. J. L. 476, the court said that proof "is a technical word, used in a technical sense, and implies the application, to some extent, of those rules under which evidence is ordinarily admitted; as, thus, a party to the record, and having a direct interest in the event of the suit, cannot be a witness for himself at the trial against the adverse party." See also Stanley v. Horner, 24 N. J. L. 513.

A statute gave jurisdiction to justices of the peace to entertain actions for penalties "upon receiving proof by affidavit or affidavits of one or more persons of the violation of any of the provisions of this act." In construing this statute, the court said: "The word proof, when used in a legislative enactment, means 'competent and legal evidence,' or, in other words, testimony that conforms to the fundamental rules of proof, one of which excludes 'hearsay evidence, however trustworthy the informant, or however implicit may be the deponent's belief in the truth of what he has heard.'" Inglis v. Schreiner, 58 N. J. L. 122. See also the title INFORMATION AND BELIEF, 10 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 854.

The word proof means legal evidence or such species of evidence as would be received in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings. Vosburgh v. Welch, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 175; Brown v. Hinchman, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 75; Betts v. Betts, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 199.

Same — Necessary Proof. — The Alabama Code (now Civ. Code 1896, § 3372, subdiv. 7), authorizes judges of probate to complete minute entries and decrees in their courts when the same are incomplete, after necessary application and proof. In Dabney v. Mitchell, 54 Ala. 200, this was held to be merely declaratory of the common law. The court said: "When words of this kind are used in a statute and are not defined, we must look to the common law for the meaning which can properly be given them. It is the evidence or the proof, as it is the application, required by the common law, which it must be supposed the statute requires to be made, and not evidence or proof the common law rejected as inadmissible or insufficient."

For matters of PROCEDURE, see ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF PLEADING AND PRACTICE, title INDICTMENTS, INFORMATIONS, AND COMPLAINTS, vol. 10, p. 344.

For other matters of SUBSTANTIVE LAW and EVIDENCE related to this subject, see in this work the titles CRIMINAL LAW, vol. 8, p. 274; EVIDENCE, vol. 11, p. 484; JEOPARDY, vol. 17, p. 580; MERGER, vol. 20, p. 587, and the titles wherein specific offenses are treated.

I. GENERAL RULE EXCLUDING PROOF OF OTHER CRIMES. — All evidence is required to be logically relevant.¹ This is a rule of logic and law alike. But the law, having regard to the character of the tribunal which tries questions of fact, excludes certain classes of evidence logically relevant, the introduction of which, if allowed, would tend to raise collateral issues, distracting and confusing the minds of the jury, and to surprise the prisoner.² Thus have grown up a number of "rules of exclusion,"³ among which is the general rule that a crime distinct from that laid in the indictment cannot be given in evidence against the prisoner.⁴

1. Relevancy. — See the title EVIDENCE, vol. 11, p. 501.

Collateral Facts Excluded. — Collateral facts or those having no connection with the facts in issue are excluded to preserve the relevancy of the evidence, and the rule investigated in this title is but a special case of this principle. Farris v. People, 129 Ill. 528, 16 Am. St. Rep. 283. See the title EVIDENCE, vol. 11, p. 503, and see COLLATERAL, vol. 6, p. 205.

The Rule Applies in Civil as Well as in Criminal Cases, but the necessity for its observance is greater in criminal cases, and it is more strictly enforced in them. Blake v. Albion L. Assur. Soc., 4 C. P. D. 94; Ingram v. State, 39 Ala. 251, 84 Am. Dec. 782; Farris v. People, 129 Ill. 528, 16 Am. St. Rep. 283; State v. Stevens, 56 Kan. 720; Lightfoot v. People, 16 Mich. 507; Dyson v. State, 26 Miss. 362; Hudson v. State, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 355; 3 Russ. on Crimes (9th Am. ed.) 279; 1 Roscoe's Crim. Ev. (8th Am. ed.) 92.

2. Reasons for Excluding Collateral Facts. — See the title EVIDENCE, vol. 11, p. 503; Thayer on Evidence 266, 516. See also Rex v. Whiley, 2 Leach C. C. 983, sub nom. *Rex v. L. 260 (quoted under the title EVIDENCE, vol. 11, p. 509, note 3); State v. Brantley, 84 N. Car. 766.

3. "Rules of Exclusion." — Thayer on Evidence 265.

4. Evidence of Distinct Crimes Generally Excluded. — In State v. Lapage, 57 N. H. 289, 24 Am. Rep. 75, the rule was stated in the following propositions: First. It is not permitted to attack the prisoner's character unless he first puts it in issue. (See the titles CHAR-

II. EXCEPTIONS TO RULE — 1. In General. — Ordinarily the Rule of Exclusion Is Also the Rule of Logic, for the commission of an independent offense is not in itself proof of the commission of another crime.¹

Principle on Which Exceptions Are Admitted. — Cases, however, occur where the crime laid in the indictment is so connected with the crime of which it is sought to introduce evidence that the existence of the one tends to establish the existence of the other, or (which is frequently the same thing) the existence of the collateral crime tends to show the presence of some element necessary to the crime charged.²

ACTER (IN EVIDENCE), vol. 5, p. 854; EVIDENCE, vol. 11, p. 518.) Second. Particular acts are not admissible to show the defendant's bad character. (See the title CHARACTER (IN EVIDENCE), vol. 5, p. 875.) Third. A tendency or disposition to commit the crime with which the prisoner is charged cannot be shown. (See infra, this title, Exceptions to Rule — In General.) Fourth. "It is not permitted to give in evidence other crimes of the prisoner unless they are so connected by circumstances with the particular crime in issue as that the proof of one fact with its circumstances has some bearing upon the issue on trial other than such as is expressed in the foregoing three propositions."

"By the law of England one offense is not allowed to be given in evidence to prove another." Per Lord Campbell, C. J., in Reg. v. Oddy, 5 Cox C. C. 210. See also to the same effect:

Connection Between Crimes Must Clearly Appear. — People v. Lane, 100 Cal. 379; Farris v. Peo-

Whether Principle or Precedent Determines Exceptions. — Exceptions, therefore, to the generality of the rule of exclusion have been introduced. But the courts are not agreed upon the terms or the extent of the exceptions. Sometimes it is stated that the exclusion of such evidence is founded on the illegality of giving evidence of other crimes merely for the purpose of thereby inferring the defendant's guilt of the crime for which he is on trial, on the ground that he is of a criminal disposition,¹ and it would seem logically to follow that where such evidence can be shown in any way to establish the defendant's guilt of the crime for which he is being tried, its introduction should be permitted.² Many of the exceptions, however, are old and well fixed, and courts take their stand on these established exceptions and will not allow the introduction of evidence of independent offenses unless the particular instance can be shown to fall under one of these recognized classes.³

Discretion of Court. — But a good deal appears to rest on the discretion of the judge as to whether such a connection between the crimes is shown as to warrant its introduction.⁴

Something More than Bare Relevancy Is Required, for the law does not permit a decision on remote inferences. See the title EVIDENCE, vol. II, p. 501. And see Thayer on Evidence 516; Best on Evidence (Chamberlayne's ed.), § 90.

The Interval of Time Intervening Between the Acts goes in general to the weight and not to the admissibility of the evidence. Spurr v. U. S., (C. C. A.) 87 Fed. Rep. 711; Mudvill Min. Co. v. Watrous, 22 U. S. App. 12, 61 Fed. Rep. 163; U. S. v. Doeblen, Baldw. (U. S.) 519; U. S. v. Thirty-Six Barrels High Wines, 12 Int. Rev. Rec. 40, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,469; *State v. But a considerable interval would seem to Classes of Exceptions Not Mutually Exclusive. — The various established classes of exceptions will now be examined in detail, but it should be borne in mind that the evidence is often admissible under more than one head. Moreover, a perfectly exclusive classification is impossible, as the classes shade into each other by imperceptible degrees, and the placing of particular examples is sometimes almost arbitrary.

Mental State Generally. — It is where, in establishing or interpreting the acts of the accused, some inference as to his state of mind is necessary that evidence of independent offenses is usually permitted.¹ States of mind — psychological facts, as they have been termed² — can rarely be shown by direct evidence, and must generally be inferred from acts.³ Frequently the surest inference as to intent (i. e., guilty knowledge) can be founded on the fact that the defendant has been guilty of other like acts in the past.⁴

2. To Prove Intent and Guilty Knowledge. — In all crimes⁵ a guilty mind or criminal intent must exist. This may be involved in the doing of the act, or a particular intent apart from the doing of the act may be required.⁶ In the latter class of cases especially, proof of independent criminal acts of like kind may be given.⁷ Thus, the fact that a man has previously passed similar counterfeit money lessens the chance of accident and may warrant the jury in inferring a guilty knowledge of the character of the money and therefore a criminal intent.⁸ The same principle is applied in numerous other crimes.⁹ Such justify the court in the exercise of a fair discretion in excluding such evidence. See Com. v. Abbott, 130 Mass. 472. Thus, the evidence of crimes two years before has been excluded. Billings v. State, 52 Ark. 303. Evidence of crimes fifteen years before is inadmissible. State v. Reed, 53 Kan. 767, 42 Am. St. Rep. 322.

Establishment of Other Crimes. — In forgery and counterfeiting it must be proved that the bills passed on other occasions were actually forged. Rex v. Millard, R. & R. C. C. 245, 1 Lewin C. C. 107, note. And see Rex v. Forbes, 7 C. & P. 224, 32 E. C. L. 497, and the title FORGERY, vol. 13, p. 1110. And the bills must be produced. Dougherty's Case, 4 City Hall Rec. (N. Y.) 166. But compare infra this section, passim, especially the subsection To Negative Accident, Mistake, or Good Faith, notes, where this rule is shown to be not of general application.

That an Indictment Is Pending for the Other Offenses sought to be shown is no ground of objection. Kirkwood's Case, 1 Lewin C. C. 103; Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 37. See also Hodgson's Case, 1 Lewin C. C. 103.

The Record of a Conviction may likewise be given in evidence where the conviction is relevant to show motive. Crass v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. 312.

As to the Similarity of Bills Counterfeited to one whose counterfeiting is on trial, see the title COUNTERFEITING, vol. 7, p. 891, note.

1. Especially Where Mental State Material. — Wood v. U. S., 16 Pet. (U. S.) 342; Continental Ins. Co. v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co., 1 U. S. App. 212; Bottomley v. U. S., 1 Story (U. S.) 135; Dunn v. State, 2 Ark. 229, 35 Am. Dec. 54; Farmer v. State, 100 Ga. 41; State v. Hinkle, 6 Iowa 380; Com. v. Stone, 4 Met. (Mass.) 47; Barron v. Mason, 31 Vt. 189. 2. Psychological Facts. — Best on Evidence (Chamberlayne's ed.), § 255.

3. Circumstantial Evidence Usually Necessary. — Castle v. Bullard, 23 How. (U. S.) 172; Moore v. U. S., 150 U. S. 57; Com. v. Stone, 4 Met. (Mass.) 47. And see quotation from Mullins v. State, 37 Tex. 338, under the title CRIMINAL LAW, vol. 8, p. 287.

4. See Rex v. Whitley, 2 Leach C. C. 983, sub nom. Rex v. Wylie, 1 B. & P. N. R. 92; Spurr v. U. S., (C. C. A.) 87 Fed. Rep. 710.

Subsequent as Well as Prior Acts are sometimes admitted to prove intent, etc. U. S. v. Doebler, Baldw. (U. S.) 526 (counterfeiting); People v. Walters, 98 Cal. 138; People v. Craig, 111 Cal. 460. See infra, this section, To Negative Accident, Mistake, or Good Faith; To Prove Motive. And see the title FORGERY, vol. 13, p. 1103.

Subsequent Crimes Excluded under Circumstances. — In People v. Dibble, (Ct. App.) 5 Park Crim. (N. Y.) 28, a case of counterfeiting, the utterance of forged bills on another bank two or three days after the crime charged was excluded.

A shooting a few minutes after the assault was excluded as evidence in People v. Lane, 100 Cal. 379, the acts not being connected. See also, to the same effect, State v. Hoyt, 13 Minn. 132.

Sodomy. — State v. Place, 5 Wash. 773.

Soliciting Bribes. — Higgins v. State, 157 Ind. 57; State v. Durnam, 73 Minn. 150.

Violation of Revenue Laws. — Wood v. U. S., 16 Pet. (U. S.) 342.

Wilfully Disturbing Peace of Neighborhood. — State v. Burns, 35 Kan. 387.

Establishing Deliberation or Malice in Murder. — State v. Deschamps, 42 La. Ann. 567, 21 Am. St. Rep. 392; People v. Shea, 147 N. Y. 78. See also infra, this section, To Prove Motive. And see the title EVIDENCE, vol. 11, p. 513.

Knowledge of Character of Drug and Purpose of Administration. — Weed v. People, 56 N. Y. 628. See also infra, this section, To Prove Common Plan. And see the title EVIDENCE, vol. 11, p. 508.

Criminal Negligence — Not Admissible. — When the charge is homicide flowing from a surgeon's criminal negligence, the result of the surgeon's treatment of former cases is not relevant either for or against him. Reg. v. Whitehead, 3 C. & K. 202. See also the title PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS, vol. 22, p. 809.

Such evidence is generally inadmissible where the homicide is chargeable to negligence. People v. Thompson, 122 Mich. 411. See further the title NEGLIGENCE, vol. 21, p. 518. Compare, however, the titles EVIDENCE, vol. 11, pp. 510, 512; FIRES, vol. 13, p. 518.

In Some Civil Cases such evidence is admissible, as in cases of:

Divorce. — See the title DIVORCE, vol. 9, p. 757.

Fraud. — See the titles FRAUD AND DECEIT, vol. 14, p. 196 et seq., FRAUDULENT SALES AND CONVEYANCES, vol. 14, p. 499. And see Mud-sill Min. Co. v. Watrous, 22 U. S. App. 12, 61 Fed. Rep. 163; Edwards v. Warner, 35 Conn. 517; Knotwell v. Blanchard, 41 Conn. 614.

Passing Notes Knowing Payee to Be Fictitious. — Gibson v. Hunter, 2 H. Bl. 288.

1. Corroboration of Inference of Guilty Intent. — State v. Balch, 136 Mo. 103; State v. Moore, 101 Mo. 316; Proper v. State, 85 Wis. 615.

3. To Negative Accident, Mistake, or Good Faith. — Falling really under the same exception as that previously stated as to intent are the cases where independent crimes are admitted in evidence to show that the act charged was done purposely, and was not the result of accident or mistake, nor done in good faith.¹ The main difference between cases usually placed under this head and those previously considered under intent is that here the act is itself evidence of the intent, while there an extraneous intent must exist. Proof of distinct offenses is also introduced to establish the criminal act, the corpus delicti,² consisting in the felonious use of dangerous agencies.³ Such are cases of prior or subsequent crimes under circumstances similar to the case on trial,⁴ or prior attempts at the commission of the same crime, to show the absence of mistake or accident.⁵ Such prior attempts have sometimes been

1. On Issue of Accident or Good Faith. — Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mechanic's Sav. Bank, etc., Co., 37 U. S. App. 692, 72 Fed. Rep. 413. See also the titles EVIDENCE, vol. II, p. 513; INSURANCE, vol. 16, p. 960.

Act Not Done in Good Faith. — Rex v. Winkworth, 4 C. & P. 444, 19 E. C. L. 465.

2. Previous Crimes to Establish Corpus Delicti. Reg. v. Flannagan, 15 Cox C. C. 403; Reg. v. Bailey, 2 Cox. C. C. 311.

Simultaneous Murders. — State v. Tettaton, 159 Mo. 354.

Sale of Slave Without License. — Chambers v. State, 26 Ala. 59 (previous sale admitted to show that defendant was slave trader). See also Taylor v. Horsey, 5 Harr. (Del.) 131.

3. That Use of Agencies Was Felonious. — See State v. Kelley, 65 Vt. 534. Illustrations are given in the next note, infra.

4. Murders by Poisoning — Previous Deaths. — Where a murder is alleged to have been committed by poisoning, it may be shown that other persons who had previously received food or medicine from the defendant had died from the same poison. Reg. v. Garner, 3 F. & F. 681, 4 F. & F. 346; Reg. v. Cotton, 12 Cox C. C. 400; Reg. v. Flannagan, 15 Cox C. C. 403 [disapproving Reg. v. Winslow, 8 Cox C. C. 397]; Farrer v. State, 2 Ohio St. 71; Zoldoske v. State, 82 Wis. 581. See also People v. Doyle, 21 Mich. 221.

Subsequent Deaths. — Reg. v. Geering, 18 L. J. M. C. 215, quoted in Reg. v. Heesom, 14 Cox C. C. 40; Reg. v. Neill, cited in Stephen on Evidence (Chase's 2d ed.) 52, note 2.

In the first case, Pollock, C. B., observed that subsequent poisonings had a tendency to prove that the death under investigation was due to poison, and from this point of view the fact that they were subsequent was wholly immaterial. "The domestic history of the family," he continued, "during the period in which all the deaths occurred is also receivable in evidence, to show that during that time arsenic had been taken by four members of it, with a view to enable the jury to determine whether such taking was accidental or not."

Murder of an Infant by Suffocation while in bed with the mother. Previous similar deaths in the same family may be proved. Reg. v. Roden, 12 Cox C. C. 630.

Murder of Infant by Keeper of "Baby Farm." — The body was found buried in the garden. Proof was admitted that in the gardens of houses previously occupied by the defendant the bodies of children were found buried.

Makin v. Atty-Gen., (1894) A. C. 57, 17 Cox C. C. 704.

Contemporaneous Death of Another Infant. — People v. Foley, 64 Mich. 148.

Abortion. — The fact that other abortions have been committed by the defendant in the same house is relevant on the issue of accident. People v. Seaman, 107 Mich. 348, 61 Am. St. Rep. 326. See also Hatchard v. State, 79 Wis. 357, stated under the title ABORTION, vol. I, p. 188, note 7. Compare Baker v. People, 105 Ill. 452.

Arson. — Property was set on fire by the prisoner by firing a gun. Evidence that the property had been on fire previously when the prisoner was near it with a gun was held to be admissible on the issue of accident. Reg. v. Dossett, 2 C. & K. 306, 61 E. C. L. 306.

Where the charge was arson to obtain money from an insurance company, evidence of two previous fires in houses occupied by the defendant, followed by claims on insurance companies, was admitted in negating accident. Reg. v. Gray, 4 F. & F. 1102.

For other cases of arson, see Com. v. McCarthy, 119 Mass. 354; Com. v. Bradford, 126 Mass. 42; People v. Murphy, 135 N. Y. 450 (stated with other cases under the title ARSON, vol. 2, p. 940, note); Kramer v. Com., 87 Pa. St. 299.

Evidence of previous fires was excluded in Reg. v. Harris, 4 F. & F. 342, as having, under the circumstances detailed, no tendency to show design.

Assault. — To negative accident where the assault was by shooting, evidence of a previous intentional assault on the same person by the prisoner may be given. Rex v. Voke, R. & R. C. C. 531. To the same general effect is State v. Patza, 3 La. Ann. 512. See also the title ASSAULT AND BATTERY, vol. 2, p. 1001.

5. Previous Attempts to commit the same crime may be shown where these attempts are connected with the prisoner and directed against the same person or property. Rex v. Donnall, 2 C. & K. 307 note, 61 E. C. L. 307 note; Reg. v. Tawell, 2 C. & K. 309 note, 61 E. C. L. 309 note; People v. Ebanks, 117 Cal. 652; People v. Shainwold, 51 Cal. 468; Com. v. Kennedy, 170 Mass. 18; State v. Nugent, 71 Mo. 136, affirming 8 Mo. App. 563; People v. O'Sullivan, 104 N. Y. 481; Goersen v. Com., 99 Pa. St. 388; State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 153.

A Subsequent Attempt has been admitted. Lamb v. State, 66 Md. 285.

admitted even when they were unconnected with the defendant, as negating accident and therefore establishing the corpus delicti.¹

4. To Prove Motive.—In criminal cases depending on circumstantial evidence,² proof of motive is often of the highest importance,³ and independent criminal acts which flow from and are explainable as the results of the same motive charged in the case on trial,⁴ or which in themselves form the motive

1. Previous Attempts Unconnected with Defendant to Establish Corpus Delicti.—Reg. v. Bailey, 2 Cox C. C. 312, a case of arson before Pollock, C. B., who cited Donallan's Case, a murder trial, where prior unconnected attempts to bring about the death of the victim were admitted to prove the criminal fact. See also People v. Clarkson, 56 Mich. 164.

So previous crimes tending to throw suspicion on the prisoner may be shown. State v. Rohfrisch, 12 La. Ann. 382; State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 153.

2. See the title MURDER AND MANSLAUGHTER, vol. 21, p. 213.

3. Motive.—"Where the crime is clearly proved and the criminal positively identified, it is not important to prove motives. But where the case depends on circumstantial evidence and the circumstances point to any particular person as the criminal, the case against him is much fortified by proof that he had a motive to commit the crime. Where the motive appears, the probabilities created by the other evidence are much strengthened." Pierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424, 35 Am. Rep. 524, per Earl, J.

"To prove the intention you may show the motive." Reg. v. Heesom, 14 Cox C. C. 44, per Lush, J.

On a trial for the murder of the prisoner's child, evidence of the murder of his wife and another child was admitted, on the theory that all the deaths were to remove obstacles to a second marriage consummated a few days after the last death. Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 37. See also the title MURDER AND MANSLAUGHTER, vol. 21, p. 216.

Upon an indictment for murder, evidence that the defendant, who had a wife living, married the widow of the deceased a few days after the crime, and of his oath that he knew of no legal obstacle to the marriage, though tending to prove the crimes of perjury and bigamy, was admitted. Pierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424, 35 Am. Rep. 524, affirming 18 Hun (N. Y.) 239.

In a case of murder, proof of a prior incestuous or adulterous connection with the wife of the deceased was allowed. State v. Reed, 53 Kan. 767, 42 Am. St. Rep. 322; Stout v. People, (Supm. Ct.) 4 Park Crim. (N. Y.) 132. See also the title MURDER AND MANSLAUGHTER, vol. 21, p. 216.

Evidence of adulterous relations with another woman may be shown where the defendant is charged with killing his own wife. State v. Watkins, 9 Conn. 47, 21 Am. Dec. 712.

Upon an indictment for murder of the prisoner's wife, evidence of previous abortions performed on her by the prisoner was admitted to establish concealment of the marriage as a motive. People v. Harris, 136 N. Y. 443.

On a trial for the murder of the defendant's brother and the brother's wife, proof of an attempt on the lives of the brother's children and subsequent forgeries against his estate were admitted to show the motive to possess of the act under consideration, may be introduced in evidence.¹ Such evidence may also be introduced to rebut the motive set up by the defense.²

5. To Prove Identity of Criminal. — It appears to be clearly established that evidence of collateral offenses is sometimes admissible to prove the identity of the perpetrator of the crime under investigation.³ But it has been held that the crimes must be very closely connected in order to render such evidence admissible, as that one must be in preparation for the other or in execution of the same plan, and that a mere parallelism between the two crimes in plan and means employed does not render such evidence relevant in a legal sense.⁴

6. To Prove Common Plan. — This exception, that evidence of other crimes is admissible where a common plan is shown,⁵ is closely connected with the his estate. People v. Wood, (Supm. Ct.) 3 Park Crim. (N. Y.) 681.

Prior Threats May Thus Be Proved. — An intention to do the violence alleged may be established not only by showing threats of violence, but by showing indictable attempts to do the injury. Edmonds v. State, 34 Ark. 732. And see the titles ARSON, vol. 2, p. 940; ASSAULT AND BATTERY, vol. 2, p. 1001; EVIDENCE, vol. 11, p. 505; MURDER AND MANSLAUGHTER, vol. 21, p. 219.

2. Rebutting Motive. — See State v. Bryant, 93 Mo. 273.

Where, upon a trial for murder, the defense was the insanity of the defendant, occasioned by fear that the person killed was attempting to debauch the defendant's daughter, the fact that the defendant had been guilty of incest with his daughter was held to be relevant. People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 513.

Illustrations — Murder. — C. was indicted for the murder of H. Proof that C., being hostile to P., hired H. to murder P., and that H. was detected in the fact, was admitted to show motive and identify the criminal, the theory being that C. then murdered H. to prevent detection. Rex v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221, 19 E. C. L. 354.

Where it is shown that a murder was committed by a person who broke into the house with certain tools, and used a weapon of a certain character in effecting the murder, evidence may be introduced that the defendant had committed a previous burglary in which such tools and such a weapon were feloniously taken along with other property, as this evidence tends to identify the defendant as the murderer. People v. Rogers, 71 Cal. 505.

On a murder trial, where the evidence is circumstantial, the fact that the defendant had committed previous assaults on the deceased is admissible with other facts to prove identity and show his animus. Washington v. State, 8 Tex. App. 377.

Where the defendant was indicted for the murder of one of two traveling companions, the evidence being all circumstantial, testimony to show that the other was killed at about the same time and place was held to be admissible to exclude the hypothesis of his being the guilty person. Smart v. Com., (Ky. 1889) 11 S. W. Rep. 431. See also Fernandez v. State, 4 Tex. App. 479; Morris v. State, 30 Tex. App. 95.

Arson. — To connect a prisoner on trial for arson with the crime for which he is being tried, evidence which involves other attempts at arson may be received. Com. v. Choate, 105 Mass. 451.

Burglary. — On a trial for burglary, a subsequent burglary during which the defendant was arrested is provable, and the fact may be shown that articles taken in the burglary on trial, together with burglar's tools, were found on the defendant. People v. McGilver, 67 Cal. 55. See also the title BURGLARY, vol. 5, p. 67.

Robbery. — On an indictment for robbery by taking from a person the key to a bank, where it was shown that the robbery was committed by a gang of masked persons, it was held to be admissible, in order to identify the prisoner as one of the gang, to prove that the bank was burglarized on the same occasion, that the prisoner was one of the gang who committed the burglary, and that the two gangs of criminals were the same. Hope v. People, 83 N. Y. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 460. And see the title ROBBERY.

Rebutting Alibi. — Evidence to rebut an alibi has been admitted though it tended to prove the defendant guilty of another felony. Reg. v. Briggs, 2 M. & Rob. 199.

4. Connection Must Be Close. — People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264. See also Boyd v. U. S., 142 U. S. 450, reversing 45 Fed. Rep. 851, because of admission of evidence of this kind for purposes of identification.

prior exceptions of motive and negating mistake. "Common plan" may mean a plan common to two or more persons, or the general plan underlying the commission of two or more criminal acts by one person. In the former case the relations between the conspirators and the fact and scope of the conspiracy may be shown even by evidence involving other criminal acts.¹ In the latter case acts committed in carrying out one criminal design may be shown.²

7. To Prove Preparation or Opportunity.—Other exceptions sometimes enumerated are evidence of collateral crimes to show preparation³ or opportunity and capacity⁴ for the commission of the crime on trial. Instances of this kind have been already considered to some extent under previous heads in this title.

8. Res Gestæ, Same Transaction.—Evidence of other crimes which form a

The connection between the crimes must be traced in the general design, purpose, or plan of the defendant, or it may be shown by such circumstances of identification as necessarily tend to establish that the person who committed one must have been guilty of the other. Swan v. Com., 104 Pa. St. 218; Shaffner v. Com., 72 Pa. St. 60, 13 Am. Rep. 649. See also Com. v. Campbell, 7 Allen (Mass.) 541, 83 Am. Dec. 705.

When two crimes are so linked together in point of time or circumstance that one cannot be fully shown without proving the other, evidence of that other is admissible. State v. Kelley, 65 Vt. 534, 36 Am. St. Rep. 884.

In Com. v. Robinson, 146 Mass. 571, the court declared that perhaps a better wording of this rule is that evidence of other crimes may be introduced "where they have some connection with each other, as a part of the same plan, or induced by the same motive. Precedent acts which render the commission of the crime charged more easy, more safe, more certain, more effective to produce the ultimate result which formed the general motive and inducement, if done with that intention and purpose have such a connection with the crime charged as to be admissible, though they are also of themselves criminal."

Where One Crime Is Committed to Prepare the Way for Another, and the commission of the second crime is made to depend upon the perpetration of the first, the two become connected and related transactions, and proof of the commission of the first offense becomes relevant to show the motive for the perpetration of the second. People v. Zucker, 20 N. Y. App. Div. 366. See also supra, this section, To Prove Motive; To Prove Common Plan.

Acts in Preparation for a Homicide May Be Proved though they involve another crime. State v. Rider, 95 Mo. 474.

Possession of Implements.—The possession of burglar's tools may be shown on a trial for burglary, to show preparation. See the title BURGLARY, vol. 5, pp. 64, 65, notes. And see supra, this section, To Prove Identity of Criminal.

So the possession of instruments to produce abortion may be shown on a trial for abortion, to indicate preparation. See the title ABORTION, vol. 1, p. 194.

part of the res gestæ may, of course, be introduced,¹ and the like evidence is admissible where the several offenses form a part of one entire transaction.²

III. EXTENT TO WHICH COLLATERAL CRIMES GONE INTO. — It has been held that when the evidence of a collateral crime is admitted from necessity, no testimony should be allowed as to the particulars thereof further than is essential for the purpose which renders the evidence relevant.³ Nor can the jury consider such evidence except in the particular connection in which it is introduced.⁴

IV. INDICTMENT — ELECTION. — From the principle excluding proof of other crimes, it follows that where the indictment charges only a single criminal act and the evidence discloses several offenses for either of which the accused may be convicted, the prosecution may be required to elect upon which offense it will ask a conviction, and the evidence should be confined to that offense, unless the case is such that proof of other crimes is admissible on the principles stated in this title.⁵ Giving evidence of one complete offense is usually held to be an election to proceed on that charge.⁶ The court may exercise some discretion in requiring an election in cases of this character.⁷

Proper Books.—The California Insolvency Act of 1880 required that merchants should have kept "proper books," in order to obtain a discharge. It was held that books which did not contain a loan to the firm which, if entered, would have shown that the firm was utterly insolvent were not "proper books" within the meaning of the statute. Matter of Good, 78 Cal. 399. See generally the title INSOLVENCY AND BANKRUPTCY, vol. 16, p. 799.

Proper Case—Constitutional Law.—By the Constitution of West Virginia, if the legislature enacts any law that is expressly prohibited by the constitution, it is made the duty of the courts, upon a proper case presented before them, to declare such law null and void. In construing this provision in Slack v. Jacob, 8 W. Va. 660, the court said: "'Proper case,' as employed in the constitution, means a case in which the courts have jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, for the purposes of the case, in whole or in part."

United States Constitution—"Laws Necessary and Proper."—See NECESSARY—NECESSITY—NECESSARILY, vol. 21, p. 449.

Proper County.—A statute provided that the plaintiff should not proceed against the bail until execution had been returned that the defendant was not to be found in his proper county. In construing this statute the court said: "Stress has been laid in argument upon the word proper, as changing the practice in this particular; and it is argued that by the 'proper county' we are to understand the county of the defendant's residence. We think otherwise, and understand it to refer to the law as it existed at the passage of the act, and to be declaratory of it. The proper county for the purposes of the action must be taken to be the county in which the defendant is found when suit is brought." Kennedy v. Spencer, 4 Port. (Ala.) 432. See also State v. Lake, 28 Minn. 362.

Same—Removal of Cause.—See State v. Lake, 28 Minn. 362.

Proper Court.—In Sargent v. Kindred, 49 Fed. Rep. 488, upon the question of the proper court in which to file a request for the transfer of a cause upon the formation of a territory into a state, the court said: "I am of the opinion that the 'proper court' is that court where the files and records of the case are found at the time the request is to be filed; that court whose clerk has the custody of the files and records, and who can transfer the same to the federal court; and that the requests in this case were filed in the 'proper court.'"

In Wells v. Clarkson, 5 Mont. 343, quoting from Wait on Fraudulent Conveyances, § 422, it was said: "By 'proper court' is meant not merely a duly constituted tribunal, but one having authority over the subject-matter of the particular case in question."

Proper Delivery.—In Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 161, it was said: "The proper delivery of an instrument is necessary to give it vitality, and is a part of its execution; and when that delivery is induced under circumstances which do not leave the party free to act advisedly, there is no proper delivery."

Proper Forms of Entertainment.—A will bequeathed property to an incorporated Masonic lodge to be used for proper forms of entertainment. In construing the will the court said that the phrase "proper forms of entertainment" authorized the lodge "to provide such forms of entertainment, both for body and mind, as it might seem proper. * * * At any rate, the phrase 'proper forms of entertainment' would include such as are customary in Masonic bodies, and we fail to see how a court of equity could regulate or control the discretion of the trustee in regard thereto." Mason v. Perry, 22 R. I. 492.

Proper Instructions.—Within the meaning of a statute which provided that in a contested will case an issue should be made up and submitted to the jury "under proper instructions by the court," it was held that "proper instructions are such as the law of the case and the testimony before the jury make pertinent." Wagner v. Ziegler, 44 Ohio St. 69.

Proper and Lawful Authority and Manner.—Adjoining owners agreed that a certain line should be the boundary between them, provided a corner which they supposed to be the true southwest corner of the town should not be moved "on proper and lawful authority and manner," and that if the true corner should ever be established to be in any other place, the boundary line between them should be located in accordance therewith. It was held that the parties must have intended to refer to such a tribunal for ascertaining the true corner of the town as the law had invested with authority to decide the question. Bishop v. Babcock, 22 Vt. 295.

Proper Lodgings—English Public Health Act.—See Warwick v. Graham, (1899) 2 Q. B. 191.

"Working Expenses and Other Proper Outgoings"—English Railway Companies Act.—Re Wrexham, etc., R. Co., (1900) 2 Ch. 436, (1900) 1 Ch. 261.

Proper Person—Garnishment.—The Georgia Code (now 2 Code 1895, § 4771) provides that a constable may be ruled for money collected by him from a garnishee, by any proper person. It was held that by "proper person" is meant "the party entitled thereto," in the language of the same section. Smith v. Johnston, 71 Ga. 749.

Proper Representative—Revival of Action.—In Zägel v. Kuster, 51 Wis. 39, it was held that the term "proper representative," as used in a Wisconsin statute providing for the revival of actions, must be construed as meaning "successor in interest."

Proper Residence—Paupers.—A statute provided that the support of an insane person should be charged to the proper county when his proper residence should have been ascertained. It was held that "proper residence," as here used, meant something more than the stopping in a county for a mere temporary purpose, as on business or for pleasure, and that only a person taking up his abode in a county with a present intention of remaining there could be said to have a proper residence in the county. State v. Dodge County, 56 Wis. 86. See generally the titles POOR AND POOR LAWS, vol. 22, p. 944; RESIDENCE.

"Proper Title"—Erroneously Used in Statute Instead of "Paper Title." — Knight v. Lawrence, 19 Colo. 425. See also Latta v. Clifford, 47 Fed. Rep. 618.

Proper Use — Married Woman. (See also the title SEPARATE PROPERTY OF MARRIED WOMEN.) — The phrases "own use" and "proper use," in deeds to married women, have been held not to create a separate estate. Blacklow v. Laws, 2 Hare, 49; Kensington v. Dollond, 2 Myl. & K. 184; Mitchell v. Gates, 23 Ala. 446; Rudisell v. Watson, 2 Dev. Eq. (17 N. Car.) 430. But in Caldwell v. Pickens, 39 Ala. 520, the words "only proper use" were held to create a separate estate.

In Snyder v. Snyder, 10 Pa. St. 423, a bequest to a widow for her own proper use during her lifetime, remainder over, was held to give her a separate use.

1. Properly Acknowledged. — The Alabama Code of 1886, § 592, relating to tax deeds, provided that a deed of a probate judge, when properly acknowledged and recorded, should convey title. In construing this statute in Jackson v. Kirksey, 110 Ala. 551, the court said: "Before the deed of the probate judge can be said to be 'properly acknowledged,' as required by the Code of 1886, the certificate should substantially conform to the only model therein given 'to be used in this state on conveyances of every description admitted to record.'" See also the title ACKNOWLEDGMENTS, vol. 1, p. 483.

Properly Cleaned. — A agreed to dig a certain quantity of iron ore annually, to clean it properly of all clay, sand, stones, etc., and to deliver it to B. In construing this contract the court said: "'Properly cleansed' may mean fitted for making iron — reduced to the pure ore — or it may mean cleaned as iron ore is usually cleaned before it is hauled to the furnace; but in this contract, this expression must be interpreted with reference to the facilities which the defendants bound themselves to furnish, and implies that degree of cleansing which reasonable skill and diligence, combined with these facilities, were capable of producing." Campbell v. Gates, 10 Pa. St. 485.

Properly Guarded. — In Glassheim v. New York Economical Printing Co., (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 13 Misc. (N. Y.) 174, it was held that where the main belt of certain machinery was boxed to a height which prevented any one from being caught by it, and the shafting was suspended at a height of over nine feet from the floor, the machinery was properly guarded, within the meaning of the requirement of the New York Factory Act.

Properly Made — Survey. (See also the title PUBLIC LANDS.) — In Adams v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 70 Tex. 276, it was said: "Such surveys as were within the contemplation of the statute must have been 'properly made by virtue of genuine or valid land certificates.' The words 'properly made' doubtless may apply to the mathematical correctness with which lands embraced in surveys returned are delineated, but they are as aptly applied to the legality of surveys — to the legal right of a survey to appropriate the land covered by it."

Properly Provisioned. — Every master, when sailing to or from a foreign port, is bound to see, before he sets sail, that his vessel is properly provisioned for the intended voyage. In U. S. v. Reed, 86 Fed. Rep. 311, it was said: "By 'properly provisioned' is not meant a bare sufficiency for a quick passage. He is bound to make reasonable provision for what is liable to happen upon the seas, though it be unexpected. He is bound to provide for such storms, such delays, such calms as often happen, which may prolong a voyage." See generally the title MASTERS OF VESSELS, vol. 20, p. 200.

"Duly Sworn" Equivalent to "Properly Sworn." — See Doe v. King, 3 How. (U. S.) 142.

I. GENERAL DEFINITION. — Property means that dominion or indefinite right of user and disposition which one may lawfully exercise over particular things or subjects, and generally to the exclusion of all others. Property is ownership, the exclusive right of any person freely to use, enjoy, and dispose of any determinate object, whether real or personal.¹

The Word "Property" Is Nomen Generalissimum, and extends to every species of valuable right and interest, including real and personal property, easements, franchises, and other incorporeal hereditaments.¹

Everything That Is Subject of Ownership. — Standing alone, the term includes everything that is the subject of ownership.²

Absolute and Qualified or Special Property. — With respect to things personal in possession, property is either absolute, qualified, limited, or special. Absolute property denotes a full and complete title, the union of the right in and the possession of any chattel; qualified property denotes a temporary or special interest, liable to be totally divested on the happening of some particular event.³

Blackstone's Definition. — The right of property "consists in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of all his [a person's] acquisitions, without any control or diminution, save only by the laws of the land." 1 Black. Com. 138. Again, "The right of property [is] * * * that sole and despotic dominion which one man claims and exercises over the external things of the world, in total exclusion of the right of any other individual in the universe." 2 Black. Com. 2. See also Pumpelly v. Green Bay, etc., Canal Co., 13 Wall. (U. S.) 166; Stevens v. State, 2 Ark. 291, 35 Am. Dec. 72; Dixon v. People, 168 Ill. 179; *Crow v. Constitutional Law. — The phrase "life, liberty, or property" in the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution (see the title DUE PROCESS OF LAW, vol. 10, pp. 288, 299) protects every valuable right which a man has, and the term "property" therein "embraces all valuable interests which a man may possess outside of himself, that is to say, outside of his life and liberty." Board of Education v. Blodgett, 155 Ill. 441, quoting Bradley, J., dissenting, in Campbell v. Holt, 115 U. S. 630.

2. Everything Which Can Be Owned. — Jones v. Skinner, 5 L. J. Ch. 90; Morrison v. Hoppe, 4 De G. & Sm. 234; Washington County v. Weld County, 12 Colo. 152; Stanton v. Lewis, 26 Conn. 449; Baker v. State, 109 Ind. 58; Pell v. Ball, Spears Eq. (S. Car.) 48.

The word "property" includes "everything" which goes to make up one's wealth or estate. Carlton v. Carlton, 72 Me. 116, 39 Am. Rep. 307.

The term "describes any estate, whether goods, money, or lands, and in its general signification includes anything capable of ownership." People v. New York, etc., R. Co., 84 N. Y. 568, affirming 22 Hun (N. Y.) 95.

3. Absolute and Qualified Property. — 2 Black. Com. 389 et seq.; 2 Kent Com. 347; 2 Steph. Com. (13th ed.) 6; 1 Bouv. Inst., §§ 468, 475; Griffith v. Charlotte, etc., R. Co., 23 S. Car. 25, 55 Am. Rep. 1. See also the title PERSONAL PROPERTY, vol. 22, p. 751; and see ABSOLUTE, vol. 1, p. 205.

Qualified Property subsists in animals fera natura so long as they are kept in possession, but is liable to be divested by their escape. See the title ANIMALS, vol. 2, p. 342. A qualified property may subsist also in fire or light, air, or water, in which elements a man can have no absolute permanent property. 2 Black. Com. 395. See also the title LIGHT AND AIR, vol. 19, p. 112. And as to water see Crandall v. Woods, 8 Cal. 141.

A Special Property, also known as a qualified or limited property, may subsist on the part of the bailee in a thing bailed, and is sufficient

Applied to Rights of Owner or to Thing Itself. — In its proper use, the term "property" applies only to the rights of the owner in the thing possessed.¹ The term, however, often means the thing possessed, as well as the estate or interest which the party possessing it may have in it.²

Whether Special Things Are Property. — Where the question under investigation is whether a particular sort of interest or right is property, the title in this to support a possessory action against third parties. Phelps v. People, 72 N. Y. 357; 2 Black. Com. 452; Jones on Bailments 80; Story on Bailments (9th ed.), § 93, questioning the proposition, however, as to deposits. See also the title BAILMENTS, vol. 3, p. 761, and cross-references there given, especially the title DEPOSIT, vol. 9, p. 286.

General and Special Ownership. — "A chattel may be the subject of distinct properties held by several persons. One may have the right to possession or use, or both, while another holds the legal title to the corporeal thing, subject to the interest of the possessor. The one has the special and the other the general ownership." Wilson v. Harris, 21 Mont. 374.

1. Property Applies Only to Owner's Rights in Thing. — Ex p. Koser, 60 Cal. 210; Ex p. Law, 35 Ga. 294; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 U. S. 421; Low v. Rees Printing Co., 41 Neb. 146; Smith v. Furbish, 68 N. H. 123; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; Griffith v. Charlotte, etc., R. Co., 23 S. Car. 25, 55 Am. Rep. 1.

A Wilful Injury to One's Right of Property in a thing is a wilful injury to his property therein. So held under Code Civ. Pro. N. Y., § 553, exempting women from arrest except, inter alia, in case of wilful injury to property. See the title IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT AND IN CIVIL ACTIONS, vol. 16, p. 45, note 1.

Property Is the Highest Right which a man can have to anything. Jac. L. Dict., quoted in Stief v. Hart, 1 N. Y. 24.

A Will of the Testator's "Property," therefore, has been held to pass the whole of his real and personal estate to the donee. Jackson v. Housel, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 281. See also Morrison v. Semple, 6 Pa. St. 94.

A Gift by Will of "All My Property That I Have Not Before Given Away and lent" conveys every residuary interest whatsoever. Harrell v. Hoskins, 2 Dev. & B. L. (19 N. Car.) 479.

The Right to Have and Use a Thing subject to law is the first essential of property. Denver v. Bayer, 7 Colo. 113 (quoted under the title EMINENT DOMAIN, vol. 10, p. 1106); Fears v. State, 102 Ga. 274; St. Louis v. Hill, 116 Mo. 534. And depriving a person of the use of property is depriving him of the property. In re Marshal, 102 Fed. Rep. 324; Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 30 Mich. 309. See also the title DUE PROCESS OF LAW, vol. 10, p. 299; EMINENT DOMAIN, vol. 10, p. 1103 et seq.

"Property" Includes the Right to Acquire as well as to enjoy. Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, quoted in Low v. Rees Printing Co., 41 Neb. 127. See also Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, quoted in the title DUE PROCESS OF LAW, vol. 10, p. 299.

"Property" Includes the Right to Alienate and Transfer as well as the right to use and enjoy. 2 Kent Com. 317 et seq.; Slaughter House

Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 127; In re Marshall, 102 Fed. Rep. 324; Arapahoe County v. Rocky Mountain News Printing Co., 15 Colo. App. 189; Ex p. Law, 35 Ga. 295; *Kuhn v. chattels,¹ but the meaning may be restricted by the context.²

As Applied to Real Property, the term comprehends every species of title, inchoate or complete, and embraces those rights which lie in contract, those which are executory as well as those which are executed.³ It includes equita-

365, it was said: "'Property' is sometimes used in a broad sense as synonymous with 'estate,' but the legal signification of the two words is not the same. 'Estate' is the broadest term, and includes choses in action. 'Property' is confined to things that are tangible."

In Whitehill v. Gotwalt, 3 P. & W. (Pa.) 328, it was said that the word "property" in a will is sufficient to carry the fee, but it does not have that effect in a deed.

"Separate Property" has not the technical sense of "separate estate" as denoting the equitable, as distinguished from the legal, estate of a married woman. Cochran v. Thomas, 131 Mo. 258.

ble as well as legal titles to land,¹ incorporeal hereditaments, and easements.²

III. MONEY. — In the broad sense of the term the word "property" will include money, and in a large number of cases it has been so construed.³ But it has been said that in the more popular and ordinary acceptation of the term it does not embrace money, and this restricted meaning has been given to the word wherever it appeared from the context or otherwise that that was the sense in which it was used.⁴

IV. CHOSSES IN ACTION. — In general, the word "property" standing alone will include choses in action.⁵ Thus, the word without the qualifying term

5. Propose in Sense of Promise. — In a letter the words "I propose to settle" have been construed to mean "I promise to settle," and so to rebut the operation of the statute of limitations. Taylor v. Miller, 113 N. Car. 340. See also Wells v. Hill, 118 N. Car. 900. And see the title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, vol. 19, p. 288 et seq.

Same — Admission of Attorneys. — A statute provided that an attorney must take an oath "in the court in which he proposes to practice." The idea expressed by the word proposes in this statute was declared to be prospective and to relate "to the time of admission and the act of admission and qualification." Ex p. Quarrier, 4 W. Va. 214.

Proposal to Sell Lottery Tickets. — A Connecticut statute made it a crime to publish in the state any written proposal to sell lottery tickets. It was held that an advertisement cautioning the public against bogus lotteries and stating that the advertiser's lottery was lawful, but which did not propose to sell lottery tickets, was not within the statute. State v. Sykes, 28 Conn. 125. See also the title LOTTERIES, vol. 19, p. 595.

PROPRIETARY.—The word “proprietary” is defined as “belonging to ownership;” “pertaining to a proprietor;” “relating to a certain owner or proprietor.”¹

PROPRIETOR. (See also the title TITLE, OWNERSHIP, AND POSSESSION.)—The word “proprietor” is defined to mean an owner; the person who has the legal right or exclusive title to anything, whether in possession or not.²

1. Proprietary — Proprietary Medicines.—Ferguson v. Arthur, 117 U. S. 487, quoting Webster's, Worcester's, and the Imperial Dictionaries. This case involved the meaning of the term “proprietary medicines” in the Internal Revenue Law, Rev. Stat. U. S., schedule A to § 3419, the court declaring that any medicinal preparation might be proprietary without being made by a private formula, or under an exclusive right claimed to the making or preparing it, or under a patent, but by reason alone that it was recommended to the public as a proprietary medicine or as a remedy for disease.

Proprietary Preparations.—It has been held that not all goods protected by a trademark come within the description of “proprietary preparations,” as that term was used in a tariff law, but only those goods which by reason of the care bestowed upon their preparation, the directions for their use, and the special use for which they are intended, were brought within the fair commercial meaning of those words. Grommes v. Seeberger, 41 Fed. Rep. 32. See generally the title REVENUE LAWS. And see PATENT MEDICINE, vol. 22, p. 259.

2. Proprietor.—Ferguson v. Arthur, 117 U. S. 487; Davis v. Murphy, 3 Minn. 119.

Broad Sense of Term.—It has been said that the term proprietor extends to any person who has a beneficial interest in the land. Lister v. Lobley, 6 N. & M. 340, 36 E. C. L. 435.

Corporation.—A Massachusetts statute provided that if the life of a passenger was lost by the negligence “of the proprietor or proprietors of any railroad, steamboat,” etc., such “proprietor or proprietors” should be liable to a fine. In-Com. v. Boston, etc., R. Corp., 11 Cush. (Mass.) 516, it was held that the word proprietors in the statute applied to all common carriers, whether corporate or joint-stock companies, the terms used being general, and embracing common carriers, incorporated or unincorporated.

Equitable Estate.—In Baltimore v. Bouldin, 23 Md. 328, it was held that one holding an equitable estate in fee, accompanied by possession or an interest equivalent to that of a tenant for ninety-nine years renewable forever, an executor or administrator of such, a mortgagee or mortgagor in possession, or a vendee under a deed of trust who subsequently acquired title in fee, was a proprietor. See also Holland v. Baltimore, 11 Md. 196.

Equitable ownership is sufficient to constitute a proprietor. Rossiter v. Miller, 5 Ch. D. 648. See also the title REAL PROPERTY, post.

Lessee and Lessor.—The term proprietor includes, in ordinary parlance, a tenant or lessee. Wilson v. Hampden F. Ins. Co., 4 R. I. 167. See also Lister v. Lobley, 7 Ad. & El. 124, 34 E. C. L. 51; Brown v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 24 U. C. Q. B. 350; Jacob Tome Institute v. Davis, 87 Md. 605.

The term “proprietor of a still” includes the lessee of a still, but not the lessor. U. S. v. Van Slyke, 8 Biss. (U. S.) 227. See generally the title REVENUE LAWS.

Proprietor of Gaming House Includes Tenant or Lessee.—See the title GAMING HOUSES, vol. 14, p. 721, note.

Lessee of Railroad “Proprietor” under Statute Creating Liability for Fires.—See the title FIRES, vol. 13, p. 440, note.

Alterations Which Are “Act of the Proprietors” within Fire-insurance Policy.—To be within this clause, the alteration must be made by the owner, authorized by him, or adopted as his, before the loss accrues. Padelford v. Provident Mut. F. Ins. Co., 3 R. I. 102. See also the title FIRE INSURANCE, vol. 13, pp. 289, 290.

Licensee.—In Hall v. Brown, 54 N. H. 495, the defendants, being the owners of a private railroad, with the consent of a railroad corporation ran their cars and engines over a part of the track of said corporation, including a highway crossing. It was held that the defendants, while thus in occupation of the track, were to be considered the proprietors of the railroad so far as regarded their rights and liabilities in obstructing the crossing.

Proprietor and Owner Synonymous.—Baltimore v. Bouldin, 23 Md. 328; Holland v. Baltimore, 11 Md. 196.

“Printer” of Newspaper Includes Proprietor Thereof.—See PRINT—PRINTER, ETC., vol. 22, p. 1297, note.

Public Land. (See also the title PUBLIC LANDS, post.)—In Aiken v. Ferry, 6 Sawy. (U. S.) 79, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 112, it was held that one who had entered public land with cash, but had not received a patent therefor, was not a proprietor thereof, and was therefore not thereby disqualified to acquire the right of pre-emption.

A stipulation described certain persons as the original proprietors of public lands. In construing this stipulation the court said: “We are bound to suppose that in order to have become the proprietors, they had done all that the Act of Congress contemplates to acquire such an occupation as would entitle them, in preference to any other persons, to claim and receive the land from the trustee.” Davis v. Murphy, 3 Minn. 119.

Receiver.—In Turner v. Cross, 83 Tex. 218, it was held that a receiver was not a proprietor within the meaning of that term as used in a statute giving a right of action for death caused by the negligence of a proprietor, owner, charterer, or hirer of a railroad. To the same effect, see Allen v. Dillingham, (C. C. A.) 60 Fed. Rep. 176; Burke v. Dillingham, (C. C. A.) 60 Fed. Rep. 729; Dillingham v. Scales, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 24 S. W. Rep. 975; Bonner v. Thomas, (Tex. Civ. App. 1892) 20 S. W. Rep. 722; Dillingham v. Blake, (Tex.

PROPRIOS.—In Spanish law proprios were productive lands the usufruct of which had been set apart to the several municipalities for the purpose of defraying the charges of their respective governments. The vacant lands, that is to say, the unappropriated royal domain, were designated as baldios o realengos.²

PRO RATA. (See also PROPORTION—PROPORTIONAL, ante.—According to a certain part; in proportion.³

PRORATE.—“Prorate” is a verb meaning to divide or distribute proportionately; to assess pro rata.⁴

Trustees Held Not to Be Proprietor.—See Aiken v. Ferry, 6 Sawy. (U. S.) 79, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 112.

Proprietor in Occupancy.—In Reg. v. Parlee, 23 U. C. C. P. 359, an indictment charging an innkeeper “in and at his tavern” with unlawfully selling liquors was held to be bad, as not necessarily bringing the defendant within the class designated by the statute 32 Vict., c. 32, § 24, O., viz., “the person or persons who are the proprietors in occupancy, or tenants or agents in occupancy, of the said place or places,” the court holding that the word “innkeeper” amounts only to a mere description, and not to an averment of his filling such a character, and the words “in and at his tavern” would not necessarily mean the proprietor in occupancy, etc., to whom the license is granted, and who alone is liable, but would also include the owner or proprietor, even if he were not the occupant.

Proprietor in Copyright Law.—See the title COPYRIGHT, vol. 7, p. 546 et seq.

The term proprietor, as used in a copyright law, has been held to extend to an assignee. Liverpool Gen. Brokers' Assoc. v. Commercial Press Telegram Bureaux, (1897) 2 Q. B. 1. See also the title COPYRIGHT, vol. 7, p. 548.

1. Propriety.—In Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 70, the word propriety, as used in an ancient Massachusetts ordinance, was held to be “nearly, if not precisely,” equivalent to the word “property.”

2. Proprios.—Sheldon v. Milmo, 90 Tex. 14, in which case it was further said: “As indicating the sources of revenue of a municipality, the words proprios and arbitrios are usually found linked together, and when so connected they are sometimes used as meaning ‘ways and means.’”

3. Pro Rata.—Rosenberg v. Frank, 58 Cal. 405, quoting Webster's and Worcester's Dictionaries. See also Pratt v. Dwelling House Mut. F. Ins. Co., 7 N. Y. App. Div. 547; Low v. Blackford, (C. C. A.) 87 Fed. Rep. 408, per Purnell, J., dissenting.

In Brombacher v. Berking, 56 N. J. Eq.

253, it was said: “Pro rata means according to a measure which fixes proportions. It has no meaning unless referable to some rule or standard.”

Pro Rata the Loss.—Two persons jointly agreeing with another party “to pro rata the loss or gain in the value” of certain shares of hotel stock at the end of two years were held to be jointly liable for half the loss. Penniman v. Stanley, 122 Mass. 310.

4. Prorate.—Rosenberg v. Frank, 58 Cal. 405. And see PRO RATA, supra.

5. Prorogation of Parliament Distinguished from Adjournment or Continuance.—See ADJOURN—ADJOURNMENT, vol. 1, p. 639, note.

6. Proscribed—Described.—In Rochester v. Harris, (1893) P. 142, in construing a statute which defined certain offenses as those proscribed by a canon of 1603, to proscribe was defined as meaning to condemn capitally, and it was held that as nothing was proscribed by the canon, the word should be understood as meaning “described” or “mentioned.”

7. Prosecute.—Brooks v. Bates, 7 Colo. 580.

The Word Prosecute Has Been Held to Have the Sense of Commence, in Code Civ. Pro. Oregon, § 27, providing that every action “shall be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest;” so that, after an action has been duly commenced, the plaintiff may assign his interest therein and the assignee is not required to become a party thereto or to commence another action in his own name. See also the title PARTIES TO ACTIONS, vol. 15, ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 707 et seq.

Claim under Fire Insurance Policy to Be “Prosecuted” in Given Time.—Presentation of claim and demand is not sufficient prosecution. See the title FIRE INSURANCE, vol. 13, p. 394.

8. The Word “Prosecution” May Refer to a Civil Proceeding.—Dolloway v. Turrill, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 399. See also State v. Strong, 39 La. Ann. 1088, per Fenner, J., dissenting.

The Provision that No One Shall Be “Prosecuted for Any Fine or Forfeiture” in a statute limiting the time for such prosecution applies to any proceeding for its recovery whether civil or criminal. Johnson v. Hughes, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 265.

An Agreement to Prosecute and Recover Claims was construed as an undertaking to bring an action on the claims, the court saying: “The word prosecution, when applied to legal pro-bring a supposed offender to justice and punishment by due course of law. It is also defined as the institution or commencement and continuance of a criminal suit; the process of exhibiting formal charges against an offender before a legal tribunal, and pursuing them to final judgment on behalf of the state or government, as by indictment or information.¹

ceedings, means to begin a civil action." Hirshbach v. Ketchum, 5 N. Y. App. Div. 326.

Usually Applied to Criminal Proceedings. — Rawlins v. Jenkins, 4 Q. B. 419, 45 E. C. L. 419; U. S. v. Reisinger, 128 U. S. 403. See also Com. v. Clarke, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 323, and the succeeding note.

1. Criminal Proceeding. — Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 269; Corbin v. People, 52 Ill. App. 356; Schulte v. Keokuk County, 74 Iowa 293; State v. Williams, 34 La. Ann. 1198; State v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., (Neb. 1902) 90 N. W. Rep. 878. See also State v. Rogum, 8 N. Dak. 548.

By Pen. Code Tex. (1895), art. 26, a prosecution is defined to be "the whole or any part of the procedure which the law provides for bringing offenders to justice." Ex p. Fagg, 38 Tex. Crim. 573.

Prosecution and Case Distinguished. — In Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 563, it was said that a "criminal prosecution" is much narrower than a "criminal case," as those terms are used in the Fifth and Sixth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

A "Prosecution" Is Distinguished from an Action or Suit in State v. Hardenburgh, 2 N. J. L. 339, and is defined to be "the following up or carrying on of an action or suit already commenced, until the remedy be attained." See also Knowlton Tp. v. Read, 11 N. J. L. 321.

May Apply to Defense. — Under a Vermont statute providing that the court "may, when necessary, require of either party sufficient security for the costs of prosecution," it was held that the word prosecution as so used applied as well to the defense as to the plaintiff's action, whenever the defense consisted of an affirmative claim in avoidance of the orator's demand. Badger v. Taft, 58 Vt. 585.

Does Not Apply to Investigation of Grand Jury. — Under the Connecticut Bill of Rights, providing that "in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have a right to be heard by himself and by counsel," etc., it was held that the word prosecution did not apply to an investigation by the grand jury. State v. Wolcott, 21 Conn. 279.

Arrest and Commitment. — In Hartnett v. State, 42 Ohio St. 568, it was held that where a person is arrested and duly committed for a crime for which he is thereafter indicted, the prosecution of that crime is pending as soon as he is arrested and committed.

May Be Synonymous with Indictment. — Within the meaning of the Pennsylvania Act of March 31, 1860, § 77 (Bright. Purd. Dig. Laws Pa., 1894, p. 1218), providing that all indictments and prosecutions for all misdemeanors, perjury excepted, shall be brought or exhibited within two years next after such misdemeanor shall have been committed, the term prosecution is synonymous with "indictment." Com. v. Haas, 57 Pa. St. 443.

Confined to Presentment or Indictment. — An Indiana statute respecting crimes and punishments provided that in all cases of conviction of any offense named in the statute, the costs of prosecution should be included in the judgment rendered against the convict. In construing this provision the court said: "We think the term prosecution, in the 80th section of the act respecting crime and punishment, in reference to the costs for which a convicted person is liable, has the same meaning expressed by it in the 78th section, and does not extend beyond the presentment or indictment." State v. Thurston, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 149.

Number of Counts — Indictment. — In Schulte v. Keokuk County, 74 Iowa 293, it was held that proceedings under an information or indictment constituted but a single prosecution, no matter how many distinct offenses were stated in as many counts or charged in the information upon which the prosecution was based.

Costs of Prosecution. — A statute provided that when a person was convicted of an offense under any statute, or at common law, the court should give judgment that the offender pay the costs of the prosecution. It was held that the effect of this statute was to impose upon a convicted defendant the duty and liability of paying all the costs and fees legally earned and taxable in the case. Corbin v. People, 52 Ill. App. 356.

Filing of Complaint. — The filing of a complaint before a justice of the peace has been held not to be the institution of a criminal prosecution. The court said: "The term prosecution, as used in section 2, article 12 of the constitution of this state, has been construed to mean a prosecution instituted by some officer whose duty it is to prosecute criminal offenses. State v. Kelm, 79 Mo. 515; State v. Shortell, 93 Mo. 123; Kansas City v. O'Connor, 36 Mo. App. 594. It is further declared in the above-cited cases that an affidavit of a private individual, made under the statutory provisions already referred to, was not an information and would not support a prosecution." Pilot Grove v. McCormick, 56 Mo. App. 533.

Malicious Prosecution. — See the title MALICIOUS PROSECUTION, vol. 19, p. 647.

Penalty — Ordinance. — A city began a proceeding by a warrant sued out in its favor charging an assault for the violation of one of its ordinances. This was held to be a civil action. The court said: "It is not a prosecution, but a suing in court to recover a penalty for the violation of a city ordinance." Sparta v. Lewis, 91 Tenn. 374. See also Alexander v. Greenville, 54 Miss. 659, stated under CRIME — CRIMINAL, vol. 8, p. 253, note.

A provision that "in all prosecutions" the accused shall have a speedy and public trial, (Kansas Bill of Rights, § 10) has been held to apply only to criminal prosecutions for violation of state laws, and not to prosecutions for the violation of city ordinances. The court said: "But will the plaintiff claim that juries are required before examining magistrates, or in courts-martial, or in cases of impeachment before the legislature? We suppose not; but the plaintiff will undoubtedly claim that juries are required in all prosecutions before police courts or police magistrates for violations of city ordinances; for such is virtually the claim made in this case. But we do not think that even this claim of the plaintiff is tenable. In our opinion, the words 'all prosecutions,' as used in section 10 of the Bill of Rights, were intended to mean only all criminal prosecutions for violations of the laws of the state, and were not intended to mean or to include prosecutions for the violation of ordinary city ordinances which have relation only to the local affairs of the city. This is the view that almost every court of the United States which has had the subject under consideration has taken concerning similar provisions in the constitutions of their states. It is well settled that one and the same act committed by a person in a city may constitute two offenses—one against the laws of the state, and the other against the ordinances of the city; and both may be prosecuted against the offender. (1 Dill. Mun. Corp., § 368 et seq., and note, and the numerous cases there cited.) Now this could not be the case if the language of said section 10 was intended to include prosecutions for violations of city ordinances as well as for violations of the laws of the state; for that same section not only provides that 'in all prosecutions the accused shall be allowed to have a speedy public trial by an impartial jury,' but it also provides that the accused shall not 'be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense.' Hence, if a prosecution for the violation of a city ordinance is as much a prosecution within the meaning of said section 10 as a prosecution for the violation of a state law, and if both kinds of prosecutions can be had for one and the same act, then the accused would as effectually 'be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense' as if both prosecutions were had strictly and exclusively under the laws of the state." State v. Topeka, 36 Kan. 76.

PROSECUTE WITH EFFECT.—See the titles BONDS, vol. 4, p. 618; REPLEVIN; and see EFFECT, vol. 10, p. 445. See also the title APPEAL BONDS AND UNDERTAKINGS, 1 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 963.

In Ex p. Fagg, 38 Tex. Crim. 576, the court said: "All prosecutions shall be in the name and by the authority of the state.' Const., art. 4, § 12. Every exercise of judicial power by a municipal corporation is as much an exercise of such power by the state as though exercised through its own officers. Harris County v. Stewart, 91 Tex. 133. Every limitation upon the judicial power of the state is as much a limitation upon such power when exercised by an agent as when exercised by it directly. 1 Desty on Tax.; Knowlton v. Rock County, 9 Wis. 410; 1 Dill. 430. The provision applies to all prosecutions, not to all prosecutions except prosecutions by the city, etc. Railroad Tax Cases, 13 Fed. Rep. 722. 'A prosecution is a criminal proceeding at the suit of the government.' Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 269. 'Applies to criminal actions.' Sparta v. Lewis, 91 Tenn. 370; Iowa R. Land Co. v. Mickel, 42 Iowa 406. The proceedings by a municipal corporation to enforce such fines and penalties as are ordinarily but by usage enforced by them are not criminal; they are civil in their nature, and are not prosecutions. 17 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW 260, note; Sparta v. Lewis, 91 Tenn. 370. But whenever imprisonment is a part of the punishment which may be imposed, and which is also imposed by statute or common law, the proceeding is criminal in its nature. 1 Dill. 432, 427, note; Huron v. Carter, 5 S. Dak. 4; Wayne County v. Detroit, 17 Mich. 400; Davenport v. Bird, 34 Iowa 524; Sioux Falls v. Kirby, 6 S. Dak. 62; Sparta v. Lewis, 91 Tenn. 370. And in such case prosecution must be in the name and by the authority of the state, and all process must run in the name of the state. Leach v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. 248; Ex p. Boland, 11 Tex. App. 159; 1 Dill., 429; Santa Barbara v. Sherman, 61 Cal. 57; State v. Bartlett, 35 Wis. 287; Platteville v. McKernan, 54 Wis. 487; Brownville v. I. NATURE OF OFFICE — SCOPE OF TITLE. — The present title will discuss the law relating to those officers who, whatever their designation, are authorized by law to appear for and represent a circuit, district, county, or municipality in actions and proceedings before courts and judicial officers.¹ Ordinarily the office of prosecuting attorney is provided for by the state constitution,² but in some states the duties of such officer are prescribed by statute and not

1. The office of attorney-general of a state or of the United States is elsewhere discussed, as are also attorneys at law in general. See the titles ATTORNEY AND CLIENT, vol. 3, p. 278; ATTORNEY-GENERAL, vol. 3, p. 475. See generally the title PUBLIC OFFICERS, post.

The prosecuting officers of a state, inferior to the attorney-general, are variously designated in the different states as "prosecuting attorney," "commonwealth's attorney," "district attorney," "solicitor," "attorney for the state," "county attorney," "circuit attorney," etc. In this article the title "prosecuting attorney" will be used as a generic term.

2. Constitutional Office. — See the respective state constitutions and statutes. See also by the constitution.¹ In at least one state a "prosecuting attorney" and a "district attorney" are distinct and separate officers; the one owes his office to the constitution, the other to a statute, and their functions are to be performed in different courts.² In another, the prosecuting attorney and the county attorney are identical officers.³ While the office of county attorney is generally a county office,⁴ a prosecuting attorney may be neither a state, a county, nor a township officer, but a "judicial circuit" officer.⁵ A district attorney of the United States is a statutory officer.⁶

II. MANNER OF FILLING OFFICE. — There are only two constitutional ways of filling the office of prosecuting attorney, viz., election and appointment.⁷ Usually the constitution provides that this officer shall be elected by the qualified voters of the jurisdiction in which he is to exercise his functions.⁸

The Right of Appointment is usually confined to filling a vacancy caused by the absence or disqualification of the regularly elected incumbent⁹ or by the formation of additional districts or circuits having no regularly elected officer,¹⁰ and is vested either in the governor,¹¹ or in the court in session or the presiding judge thereof,¹² or in the county board of supervisors,¹³ or in the police jury,¹⁴ or in the mayor and council of a municipal corporation.¹⁵ Sometimes the power of appointment is conferred upon two persons or bodies, and the one first exercising the power exhausts it.¹⁶ One appointed to fill a vacancy

that occurs between the election and the installation of the officer elected cannot deprive the regularly elected officer of his term or postpone its beginning.¹ The court will presume that an incumbent of the office has been regularly appointed or elected.² Acts of the legislature changing the mode of appointment are not retroactive,³ and special provisions as to filling vacancies in the office control provisions of a general law as to vacancies.⁴

III. APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT COUNSEL. — Counsel to assist the prosecuting attorney may be appointed by the court in its discretion,⁵ or by the attorney-general,⁶ or with the court's sanction by the prosecuting attorney himself,⁷ or by the board of supervisors.⁸ But the prosecutor has no power to employ counsel to aid the prosecuting attorney.⁹

IV. ELIGIBILITY — Fourteenth Amendment. — It has been held that the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which disqualifies from holding office any executive or judicial officer of any state who, having taken an oath to support the constitution, has subsequently engaged in insurrection or rebellion against it, applies to county attorneys.¹⁰

Age. — State statutes have sometimes prescribed a certain age as necessary to make one eligible to the office of prosecuting attorney.¹¹

Residence. — So under some statutes residence in the county or district for a specified time is a prerequisite to eligibility.¹² But an assistant to the prosecuting attorney need not be a resident of the county in which his services are to be rendered,¹³ and when the county of his residence is transferred by the legislature to another judicial district, the attorney does not thereby become the attorney of the latter district.¹⁴

Whether Prosecuting Attorney Must Be Attorney at Law. — Strangely enough, most state constitutions have failed to enact that only attorneys at law are eligible to the office of prosecuting attorney.¹⁵ In consequence of this omission the question whether such officer must be a lawyer has been warmly discussed and not uniformly decided. Some states holding the affirmative base their conclusion upon the self-evident import of the words, a "prosecuting attorpointed for the sole purpose of certifying a bill of costs. State v. Seibert, 130 Mo. 202.

15. In the Constitutions of Kentucky (§ 100) and of Maryland (art. 5, § 10), it is provided that the prosecuting officer must be an attorney at law when chosen.

ney" evidently meaning an attorney chosen to act as prosecutor.¹ Others regard this reason as inconclusive and contend that any such construction of the words places a limitation upon the right and power of the electors to choose whom they will to act for them — a limitation unwarranted because not fixed by the constitution.² It has even been held that the legislature has no power to go beyond the constitution and prescribe additional qualifications.³ Where the prosecuting attorney need not be an attorney at law, a disbarred lawyer may hold the office.⁴

How Eligibility Determined. — Where a prosecuting officer has been performing his duties for some time, the question of his eligibility can be determined only in a quo warranto proceeding in the proper court. The board of county commissioners cannot declare the office vacant;⁵ nor can the question be raised indirectly by a motion to quash an indictment on the ground of the legal incapacity of the attorney who drew the bill.⁶

The Office Is Not One under the Civil Service Acts, and an applicant for the position is not subject to the civil service examination.⁷

Women Ineligible. — It has been held, not without vigorous dissent, that a woman, although admitted as an attorney, is ineligible to the office of prosecuting attorney.⁸

V. TENURE, REMOVAL, AND RESIGNATION. — The Term of Office of a prosecuting attorney is fixed either by the constitution or by the statutes of the state,⁹ and if elected under one act his term is not abridged by the election of another prosecuting attorney under another act.¹⁰ An appointee to fill a vacancy holds only until the vacancy is filled by the removal of the cause thereof or by the holding of another election,¹¹ and until his successor qualifies;¹² but sometimes failure to qualify within a specified time creates a vacancy which must be filled by appointment.¹³ Sometimes an appointee holds during good behavior; and when so holding the term may continue as long as the statute remains in force.¹⁴ In other jurisdictions he holds during the pleasure of the court, which may remove him and appoint his successor without assigning any reason therefor.¹⁵

Removal. — A prosecuting attorney may be removed from office for official misconduct,¹⁶ habitual drunkenness,¹⁷ or conviction of a felony, which will vacate the office from the date of the sentence.¹⁸ But if the judgment of conviction is reversed, the officer is entitled to be restored to his office, and may compel restoration by mandamus.¹⁹

The Election of a Successor has been held to be equivalent to a revocation of the authority of the incumbent.¹

Where the Term Is Fixed by the Constitution, the legislature may not abolish the office nor abridge the term thereof,² nor has the governor the right to remove a prosecuting officer during his term and to appoint another in his stead.³

President. — The President of the United States has the power to remove a district attorney before the expiration of his term.⁴

The Resignation of a Prosecuting Attorney of a county must be tendered to the board of supervisors⁵ or to the Court of Common Pleas of his county; it is not effectual if made to a judge in vacation.⁶

Indefinite Absence of the incumbent from the county does not create a vacancy in the office.⁷

VI. POWERS AND DUTIES — 1. In General. — The powers and duties of prosecuting attorneys cannot be implied or loosely inferred from general principles. They must be found clearly and explicitly defined by statute or ordinance.⁸ These powers and duties may in a general way be divided into those pertaining to criminal prosecutions, those pertaining to civil proceedings, and certain miscellaneous powers and duties not belonging exclusively to either of these two classes.

2. In Criminal Prosecutions. — It is the exclusive right and duty of a prosecuting attorney to conduct for the government all criminal cases in the courts of his jurisdiction, and to do whatever is essential to such prosecution.⁹ He may by an information bring accused persons before justices of the peace,¹⁰ and may advise those officers as to the law, but may not stop criminal proceedings instituted before them,¹¹ though in some jurisdictions he may dismiss before a justice a complaint for felony if it does not, in his opinion, charge a sufficiently high degree of crime.¹² In other jurisdictions, while he may move for such dismissal, the power to dismiss rests with the court.¹³ While in some states he may appear and prosecute cases before a justice of the peace,¹⁴ he is not required to do so.¹⁵ He may send in an indictment to the grand jury without first binding over the accused.¹⁶ As a judicial or quasi-judicial officer he has a certain discretion as to when, how, and against whom to proceed;¹⁷ may enter the room of the grand jury when it is in session, for the purpose of informing and instructing the jurors as to their duties,¹⁸ and may be a competent witness as to proceedings before the grand jury;¹⁹ but he may not prevent that body from considering charges by declaring that the government will not prosecute.¹ In some states he may and should follow a case commenced in his district into any other district or court to which the case may be taken by change of venue or writ of error, and conduct it there;² in others he is not allowed to do so, that duty devolving upon the prosecuting attorney of the other district.³ But he cannot institute proceedings out of his jurisdiction without the consent of the attorney-general.⁴ He may move to set aside a stay of proceedings or to quash a writ of error,⁵ and may agree that a forfeiture of a recognizance shall, on certain terms, be set aside.⁶ In some states the prosecuting attorney must prosecute for penalties incurred by the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday or on election day.⁷ In examining witnesses he has the power to administer an oath.⁸

Right to Enter Nolle Prosequi. — The prosecuting attorney's right to enter a nolle prosequi has been the subject of much discussion and much difference of opinion. The old rule that he has such power by virtue of his office and independently of the court has been reaffirmed in many cases.⁹ Other cases hold that the power to enter a nolle prosequi is to be exercised only with the assent and approval of the court.¹⁰ Where the case has gone so far as the impaneling of a jury, the prosecuting attorney cannot enter a nolle prosequi without the consent of the accused. The latter is entitled, if he so insists, to a verdict the effect of which is to bar any subsequent action on the same charge.¹¹

Must Be Just and Impartial. — The prosecuting attorney must not suggest false charges against a prisoner, nor introduce improper testimony against him, nor distort or withhold evidence in order to convict.¹² He must not draw damaging conclusions from the defendant's failure to testify in his own behalf.¹³

He Should Not Act in a Case if he has before appeared in a civil suit against the

Certain Miscellaneous Matters. — He has no power to enter a remittitur of a portion of the verdict of a jury,⁴ nor to agree that judgment may be rendered for less than is due to the state,⁵ nor to waive a part of the imprisonment prescribed by statute,⁶ nor by his consent to confer jurisdiction to hear an appeal after the prescribed time for taking an appeal has elapsed,⁷ nor to extend the time for filing a bill of exceptions,⁸ nor to compromise upon other terms than those prescribed by statute.⁹ While it is the better practice for the prosecuting attorney to sign all bills of indictment, such signature is not indispensable to the validity of such bill.¹⁰

3. In Civil Actions. — It is the privilege and duty of the prosecuting attorney to appear for the state in the several counties of his district in civil actions to which the state, county, or other political division is a party,¹¹ and it is his duty so to appear without reference to the locality of the court in which the action may be pending.¹² He may appeal when he thinks the state is injured by the decision,¹³ but only during his term of office,¹⁴ and with the consent of the County Court, when such consent is required by statute.¹⁵ He may apply for a writ of certiorari to carry a case to the Supreme Court,¹⁶ and must appear in that court in cases removed from his county.¹⁷ He may file quo warranto proceedings to test the right of an incumbent to an office or of a corporation to its charter,¹⁸ and may be compelled by mandamus to do so.¹⁹ He may sue on an undertaking given as bail in a criminal case,²⁰ may institute injunction proceedings against a state board²¹ or city officers,²² may sue upon the official bond of a county official,²³ may bring suit to annul a patent granted by the state²⁴ or to recover a statutory penalty against a foreign corporation,²⁵ may institute a proceeding to enforce a public charity,¹ may receive and receipt for fines imposed by the courts in his district, collect judgments rendered for such fines, and pay the proceeds over to the school superintendents of the proper counties,² must prosecute all suits for the collection of the public revenue,³ and must add his indorsement to papers properly executed when such indorsement is necessary to their completeness.⁴ But he has no power to bring a suit in behalf of the people of a state, which is able to appear by itself and to sue and be sued in its own name.⁵ He cannot bring an action in the name of the county against the county commissioners.⁶ He may not institute process or proceedings which the county commissioners alone are authorized to institute,⁷ nor act independently of the board of supervisors in matters peculiarly or exclusively within their prerogatives,⁸ nor control the action of the sheriff or marshal in the execution of warrants,⁹ nor purchase in the name of the state lands sold to satisfy a judgment in favor of the state.¹⁰ He cannot, after the expiration of his term of office, accept money due to the county so as to discharge the debtor,¹¹ nor act at all in an official capacity.¹²

4. Miscellaneous. — By virtue of his election or appointment, a prosecuting attorney is entitled to an undisputed and exclusive exercise of the functions of his office, and if illegally ousted therefrom he may be restored by writ of mandamus.¹³ He may also prosecute an action upon his own relation against one who intrudes into his office.¹⁴

Employing Assistants. — He may, with the sanction of the court, procure counsel to assist him in a trial and bind the county to pay for their services;¹⁵ and where such assistants are employed by the County Court or other power, the prosecuting attorney may control the proceedings in court.¹⁶ While he may delegate to such counsel the right to open and close the argument,¹⁷ he may not make a general delegation of his powers as prosecuting attorney.¹⁸ A United States district attorney may employ a stenographer without first getting permission from the attorney-general.¹⁹

Right to Examine Papers. — He is entitled to an inspection and examination of all papers and documents in the office of a city magistrate.²⁰

To Hold Two Offices. — He may hold at the same time another office whose duties are not incompatible with those of prosecuting attorney, such as notary public, or captain in the volunteer service of the United States.²¹

To Control Case. — While a case is under the control of the prosecuting attorney, any agreement he may make with reference to the disposition thereof is binding so far as it is proper and legal.²² He may, acting for the state, consent to the selection of a special judge to try a case when the regular judge is disqualified.²³

Medium of Communication with Executive Branch. — As the recognized officer of the government, he is the only medium through whom the court can communicate with the executive authorities.¹

Appearance of Government. — But he is not so far an officer of the court that it may compel him to enter an appearance for the government.²

Upon Retirement he must surrender to his successor the prosecution of all pending suits.³

Things He May Not Do. — Besides the numerous powers and duties already enumerated, there are certain other things of a general character which it is the duty of this officer to refrain from doing. He must not usurp or assume powers not pertaining to his office, nor use corruptly those which properly belong to it.⁴ He must not consort with jurors or witnesses in such a way as to influence them to act and speak unfairly or with prejudice.⁵ After ceasing to be prosecuting attorney he must not do any act that would embarrass or defeat any action prosecuted by his successor or by the attorney-general, or that would prejudice the rights of the state.⁶ He may not compromise with the debtors of the government on the ground that judgments against them could not be collected,⁷ nor dismiss a criminal charge pending before a grand jury⁸ or a commissioner.⁹

A United States District Attorney cannot appear in cases arising under territorial laws; but only when the court sits as a District or Circuit Court of the United States.¹⁰

5. Of Assistant Prosecuting Attorneys. — An assistant or one chosen pro tempore can usually do whatever the regular prosecuting attorney is authorized to do, and his acts have the same validity as though done by the principal in person.¹¹ Such assistant, however, need not be sworn and need not give bond.¹² It is no objection to such assistants that they were employed on private account and paid for their services by parties personally interested in the issue of the action.¹³

VII. COMPENSATION — 1. In General. — The compensation of a prosecuting attorney may be paid by salary, or by fees, or by a percentage of the costs or fines, or by two or more of these methods at the same time. As a general rule he is not entitled to compensation except for services which he is expressly authorized and empowered to perform.¹⁴

2. Salary. — The salary of this officer is fixed usually by statute or by a contract between him and the board of supervisors or other governmental authority, and when so fixed for a definite term, cannot be either increased or diminished during such term.¹ Where a maximum salary is fixed, a sum paid to a prosecuting attorney pro tem. may be deducted from the amount.² Extra compensation paid for services performed in another county after the expiration of the attorney's term of office is not an increase of salary.³ Payment of salary cannot be refused because the officer was inefficient or without learning.⁴ A prosecuting attorney legally entitled to the office is entitled to the salary for the term, whether in possession of the office or not, and although the salary may have been paid to one wrongly in possession.⁵ It is sometimes provided that the salary shall not exceed the aggregate amount of fees earned and collected during the term of office.⁶ Abolishing the office, of course, abolishes the salary attached.⁷

3. Fees. — Where paid by fees, the prosecuting attorney is entitled only to such fees as the statute prescribes.⁸ Ordinarily, the character of the crime is the criterion by which the amount of the fee is fixed.⁹

A Prosecuting Attorney Is Not Entitled to a Fee unless the case is actually tried,¹⁰ or sentence is passed,¹¹ nor until a conviction is secured,¹² nor if the judgment of conviction is reversed,¹³ nor for making a motion for judgment after verdict,¹⁴ nor in a case in which he did not actually appear,¹⁵ nor, sometimes, even

Insolvent Costs. — Sometimes the prosecuting attorney is empowered to retain fines in his hands for the payment of his "insolvent costs."¹⁴

Number of Fees Allowed. — Under the statutes of the various states it has sometimes been held that where several persons are jointly indicted and convicted, the prosecuting attorney is entitled to a separate fee for each one.¹⁵ The same is true where several judgments are rendered against the same defendant,¹⁶ or where the bill of indictment contains several counts.¹⁷ So likewise he is entitled to his fee in all the courts through which the cause may pass, when the defendant is ordered to pay costs.¹⁸ In other cases the court has held that only one docket fee can be taxed, whatever the number of defendants,¹⁹ or the number of convictions of the same defendant,²⁰ or the number of counts in the indictment,²¹ or the number of bills of exceptions.²² He cannot charge a fee for conviction in addition to a fee allowed for a jury trial.²³ Under the old practice in New York he was not entitled to charge for a subpoena ticket besides a subpoena for each witness,²⁴ and could charge for only two subpoenas for the same witness in the same case.²⁵

cessor upon the same fund for his unpaid fees;¹ but this rule is not followed where the case was begun and all the work done by the predecessor.² And where a part of the services was performed by each of the claimants, the court may divide the fund equitably between them.³ Where a fine is imposed in a case appealed from a justice's court, the fee is to be paid to the attorney appearing in the lower court.⁴

4. Percentage Commissions. — Sometimes a prosecuting attorney is paid wholly or partly by allowing to him a commission on fines and forfeitures actually collected by him, or on judgments obtained by him.⁵ He is entitled to his commission whether the money passes through his hands or is collected through his agency,⁶ and sometimes even before collection if the case is determined.⁷ He is not entitled to commissions on a forfeited bond or recognition,⁸ nor where no judgment is rendered and collected,⁹ nor on fines worked out by the prisoner,¹⁰ nor on money paid upon a compromise made by the board of supervisors pending an action,¹¹ nor on sums recovered in actions on official undertakings,¹² nor for any services which it is his duty to perform for his salary, even though he has a special contract with the county commissioners.¹³

Remission, Commutation, etc. — Neither the governor nor the attorney-general has the power to deprive the prosecuting attorney of his fees or commissions, either by commutation, respite, remission, or postponement,¹⁴ but the legislature has such power of remission up to a certain time.¹⁵ Where the fee is reduced upon a retaxation of costs, however, the attorney may not appeal, since the state is not interested in the result.¹⁶

Lien for Commissions. — Sometimes the prosecuting attorney has a lien upon the fund so arising for his fees and commissions.¹⁷

5. Extra Services. — A prosecuting attorney is sometimes entitled to extra pay for extra services. Thus, if he goes beyond the limits of his county when not required to do so, a reasonable compensation may be allowed to him,¹ and although he has no contract for such services the law will imply a contract.² But where the services are within the scope of his duties nothing can be claimed therefor, although they may be prolonged and arduous.³ The allowance of extra compensation by the court is a judicial act and must be by order entered under the judge's authority.⁴

6. Expenses. — A prosecuting attorney is empowered to do whatever is necessary to the prosecution of criminal offenses, and all necessary expenses incurred in the performance of his duty are a charge upon the county.⁵

7. Of Assistant Attorneys. — Where the court or the commissioners have the power to appoint an assistant to the prosecuting attorney, or special counsel for special services, they may also fix the compensation to be allowed to him.⁶ An assistant attorney cannot recover for services not authorized by competent authority.⁷ Sometimes the office of assistant prosecuting attorney is a distinct office created by statute, with an independent salary attached.⁸ Sometimes the statute authorizing the appointment fixes the compensation.⁹ In some cases the judge's certificate has been held conclusive of the necessity of appointment and of the compensation to be paid, and as justifying a mandamus to compel the county board to pay.¹⁰ The sum fixed by the commissioners is not conclusive against the attorney, but suit may be brought against the county for a reasonable sum.¹¹ The board of supervisors may likewise reduce an exorbitant sum allowed by the court.¹²

8. Liability of State or County. — While the fees of the prosecuting attorney are sometimes made payable out of the state treasury¹³ or out of a specified fund therein,¹⁴ they are much more often a tax upon the county in which the case arose.¹⁵ Such claims against the county cannot be enforced by mandamus, but must be audited by the county commissioners.¹ A prosecuting attorney who has advanced unauthorized sheriffs' fees cannot collect them from the county;² nor can he collect fees from the county where he should have collected them from the defendants but made no attempt to do so.³

9. Of United States District Attorneys — a. FEES. — Except in a few special cases, the compensation of district attorneys of the United States is paid by fees. The federal statutes enumerate what the fees shall be for the various services required and how such fees shall be paid.⁴ It is further provided that the fees and emoluments of the office, over and above necessary expenses, shall not exceed six thousand dollars a year.⁵ The compensation derived from fees is virtually a salary restriction, and in effect forbids all additional allowances for extra services within the scope of the appointment, unless such extra reward be authorized by express law.⁶ But the statute allows district attorneys to charge other clients a reasonable and customary fee for services in cases in which they are specially interested.⁷

In Construing These Sections of the Statute it has been held that two fees cannot be charged for two days' work done in one,⁸ or for appearing in two cases before the same commissioner on the same day;⁹ but a double per diem may be earned by appearing on the same day before a United States commissioner and before the court.¹⁰ If the court is open for business, the prosecuting attorney may claim the per diem fee although not in attendance.¹¹ The fee is payable in cases tried before a jury although there is a mistrial and no verdict,¹² for attending before a commissioner when recognizances are taken,¹³ or for time spent in investigating a charge before arrest when witnesses are examined, or even though no witnesses were examined if for the reason that the commissioner adjourned the case;¹⁴ but not in investigating cases never brought to trial, and where no witnesses were heard,¹⁵ nor for Sundays or legal holidays falling within the term of court,¹⁶ nor for warrants removing prisoners from one district to another,¹⁷ nor when a case is remitted from a Circuit to a District Court.¹⁸ Under the clause allowing a counsel fee for a criminal conviction, the fee is payable when the defendant pleads not guilty, although he offers no evidence and subsequently consents to a verdict of guilty.¹⁹ For procuring a compromise of a civil suit the district attorney is entitled to the discontinuance fee of five dollars, but for a discontinuance before a commissioner the per diem fee, and not the discontinuance fee, is paid.²⁰ The appointment of special counsel to try a case does not deprive the district attorney of the right to his fees,¹ and the fee allowed by the court cannot be reduced by the attorney-general or the accounting officer.²

b. MILEAGE. — The act allows to the district attorney ten cents mileage for travel in each direction between his home and the place of holding court. Such fee is a substitute for expenses and relieves the officer from keeping an itemized expense account,³ but it is not to be included in the fees or emoluments going to make up his salary.⁴ He may travel by the most convenient and practicable route, although it is not the shortest, and is entitled to mileage in traveling from his home to the place of examination although this is his official headquarters,⁵ or from one place where he is officially engaged to another to appear before a commissioner,⁶ and for successive days of attendance where travel is necessary.⁷ But mileage is not allowed for travel in going home on Saturday and returning on Monday,⁸ nor where mileage has already been once allowed for travel to the same place to appear the preceding day before a commissioner, nor for travel to appear before a judge or commissioner where no charges have been made against any one and no witnesses are examined,⁹ nor for traveling expenses of assistants appointed by the attorney-general and advanced by the district attorney.¹⁰

c. SUITS UNDER REVENUE LAWS. — Each district attorney is entitled to two per cent. on all moneys collected or realized in suits arising under the revenue laws, to be in lieu of all costs and fees in such proceeding.¹¹ For the prosecution of frauds on the revenue, the district attorney is entitled to an allowance, for expenses and services, of such sum as the secretary of the treasury shall deem just and reasonable.¹² Such allowance is payable even in cases in which the district attorney decides that no prosecution shall be instituted.¹³

d. EXTRA SERVICES. — Extra compensation is, however, allowed by statute for services which the district attorney is not regularly obliged to perform, but only in case such services are authorized by law or notorious usage and a special appropriation is made therefor.¹⁴ Under this section of the statute extra compensation has been allowed to a district attorney for services rendered in the Circuit Court of Appeals of his own district.¹⁵ Extra compensation has been refused for conducting proceedings to condemn lands for the site of a fortification¹⁶ or public park,¹⁷ for assisting special counsel in defending the United States in damage suits,¹⁸ for appearing in an appellate court outside the district,¹⁹ for appearing in suits brought by receivers of national banks in winding up their affairs,¹ for examining titles to land taken by the government,² and for a suit to recover a fraudulent pension.³

Assimilated Fees. — Under another section special compensation is allowed in cases instituted in the United States or state courts wherein the United States is interested but is not a party of record, or in which officers of the United States are defendants.⁴ The fees in such cases must be assimilated, as nearly as may be, to those provided for similar cases in which the United States is a party.⁵ Further, when appearing in behalf of a revenue officer the district attorney is entitled to such compensation as the trial court certifies to be proper and the secretary of the treasury approves.⁶

Fees Can Be Paid to an Attorney Other than the District Attorney when specially authorized by law and on the certificate of the attorney-general that such services have been performed and that special counsel was necessary.⁷ The determination of the attorney-general as to the necessity and the amount of compensation due is conclusive, but if the amount is not fixed by that officer, the district attorney may recover in quantum meruit.⁸

Necessary Expenses. — The district attorney is also entitled to recover expenses of necessary telegrams, printing, stenographer, stationery, and clerk hire.⁹

Allowance by President. — Extraordinary expenses otherwise unprovided for may be allowed by the President of the United States.¹⁰

VIII. LIABILITY OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS. — A prosecuting attorney is not liable for libel in reading in open court an indictment known to be false, nor for malicious prosecution in including in an indictment one against whom no bill has been found,¹¹ nor is he liable for procuring a conviction unless he acted maliciously,¹² nor for clerk's fees which he has not collected,¹³ nor for the shortcomings of the marshal,¹⁴ nor for neglect to enter a default against a defendant upon failing to appear and answer.¹⁵ But he is liable for fines collected and not paid into the treasury,¹⁶ or for other official misconduct.¹⁷

18. Prosecuting Witness. — Under the Illinois Act of 1869, which provided that one-half the penalty to be recovered against a railroad company for an omission to ring the bell or sound the whistle on the approach of a train to a crossing of a public highway should go to the prosecuting witness, it was held not to be essential, to entitle the person in whose name the suit was brought to recover, that he should actually have testified in the case. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Herr, 54 Ill. 356.

19. Prosecutor. — In Wight v. Rindskopf, 43 Wis. 354, it was said: "A public prosecutor is a quasi-judicial officer, retained by the public for the prosecution of persons accused of crime, in the exercise of a sound discretion to distinguish between the guilty and the innocent, between the certainly and the doubtfully guilty; never voluntarily to acquiesce in an acquittal upon certain presumption of guilt, or

PROSPECT.—To prospect signifies to explore for unworked deposits of ore, as a mining region; to do experimental work upon, as a new mining claim, for the purpose of ascertaining its probable value.¹

PROSTITUTE—PROSTITUTION. (See also the titles ABDUCTION, vol. 1, p. 162; DISORDERLY HOUSES, vol. 9, p. 508; FORNICATION, vol. 13, p. 1118; LEWD AND LASCIVIOUS COHABITATION AND CONDUCT, vol. 18, p. 841; NIGHT WALKER, vol. 21, p. 540; SEDUCTION; WHORE.)—A Prostitute is a woman who is given to indiscriminate lewdness for gain.²

The Word "Prostitution," in its most general sense, is understood to mean the act of letting one's self to sale, or of devoting to infamous purposes what is in one's power; as, the prostitution of talents or abilities; the prostitution of the press, etc. In a more restricted sense, the word means the act or practice of a woman offering her body to an indiscriminate intercourse with men; the common lewdness of a woman.³

Intercourse with One Man Not Prostitution.—The phrase "illicit sexual intercourse" and the word "prostitution" are not convertible terms. "Prostitution," as the term is used in the criminal statutes of the several states, means common, indiscriminate, meretricious, illicit intercourse, and not sexual intercourse which is confined exclusively to one man.⁴

in conviction upon doubtful presumption of guilt." In State v. Cohn, 9 Nev. 180, it was held that a prosecutor is one who instigates the prosecution by making the affidavit upon which the accused is arrested; so that a person named in the indictment as the owner of property in respect to which the alleged crime is charged to have been committed is not necessarily the prosecutor.

Prosecutor and Witness Distinguished.—In State v. Millain, 3 Nev. 409, it was held that a prosecutor was one who preferred an accusation against the party whom he suspected to be guilty, and that a party who appeared in response to a subpoena was not a prosecutor, but only a witness.

As to the Meaning of "Prosecutor" in the Vermont Statute Regulating Fishing in Lake Champlain and tributary rivers, see Drew v. Hilliker, 56 Vt. 641.

1. Prospect.—Cent. Dict., quoted in Martin v. Eagle Creek Development Co., (Oregon 1902), 69 Pac. Rep. 219.

In Bishop v. Baisley, 28 Oregon 136, it was said: "The word prospecting, when used with reference to annual labor to be expended upon a mining claim, * * * is not used in the sense of 'exploration and discovery,' which is necessary before a valid location can be made, but rather in the sense of 'development and demonstration,' that the value of the ledge may be determined, as distinguished from the ascertainment of its existence." See also the title MINES AND MINING CLAIMS, vol. 20, p. 734 et seq.

2. Prostitute.—State v. Stoyell, 54 Me. 27; Com. v. Cook, 12 Met. (Mass.) 97; Davis v. Sladden, 17 Oregon 259; Reg. v. Rehe, 6 Quebec Q. B. 276.

Common Prostitute.—In Springer v. State, 16 Tex. App. 593, it was said: "A common prostitute is a public prostitute, who makes a business of selling the use of her person to the male sex for the purpose of illicit intercourse. A woman may be a prostitute and yet have illicit connection with one man only; but to be a common prostitute her lewdness must be more general and indiscriminate." See, however, the cases cited infra, this definition, Intercourse with One Man Not Prostitution.

3. Prostitution.—Miller v. State, 121 Ind. 297; Nichols v. State, 127 Ind. 409; State v. Stoyell, 54 Me. 26; Com. v. Cook, 12 Met. (Mass.) 97; State v. Gibson, 111 Mo. 92 (quoted under CONCUBINAGE, vol. 6, p. 433); Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 610; Reg. v. Rehe, 6 Quebec Q. B. 274. See also the title ABDUCTION, vol. 1, p. 177.

Concubinage and Prostitution Distinguished.—See CONCUBINAGE, vol. 6, p. 433.

Federal Statute Prohibiting Importation for Prostitution.—See the title IMMIGRATION, vol. 15, p. 1028.

That the word prostitution is sufficiently definite in an indictment under the statute, see U. S. v. Pagliano, 53 Fed. Rep. 1001.

Not Dependant on Compensation.—A woman who submits to indiscriminate sexual intercourse, which she invites, is a prostitute, regardless of the compensation she receives for such acts. State v. Clark, 78 Iowa 492.

"Prostitution" Is in No Sense a Technical Term, and has no common-law meaning. Com. v. Cook, 12 Met. (Mass.) 97; Henderson v. People, 124 Ill. 607; People v. Cummons, 56 Mich. 544; Tores v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1901), 63 S. W. Rep. 881.

4. Common and Indiscriminate Intercourse.—U. S. v. Zes Cloya, 35 Fed. Rep. 493; Haygood v. State, 98 Ala. 62; Bunfill v. People, 154 Ill. 640; Osborn v. State, 52 Ind. 526; Fahnestock v. State, 102 Ind. 163; Miller v. State, 121 Ind. 296; State v. Ruhl, 8 Iowa 447; State v. Stoyell, 54 Me. 24; Com. v. Cook, 12 Met. (Mass.) 93; State v. Gibson, 111 Mo. 96; State v. Brow, 64 N. H. 577; Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 603; Reg. v. Rehe, 6 Quebec Q. B. 276.

Enticing Female "for Purpose of Prostitution."—Enticing or taking away any female (or any unmarried female) of chaste life for the purpose of prostitution (or concubinage) is a crime in several states. See the titles ABDUCTION, vol. 1, p. 177 et seq.; SEDUCTION.

The contrary, however, has been held.¹

PROTECT—PROTECTION.—See note 2.

PROTEST. (See also the titles BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES, vol. 4, p. 378; NOTARY PUBLIC, vol. 21, p. 552.)—To protest means to make a solemn declaration of opposition.³

PROTESTANDO.—See PROTESTATION, post.

PROTESTANT.—A Protestant is a Christian who protests against the doctrines and practices of the Roman Catholic church; one who adheres to the doctrines of the Reformation.⁴

Under the Illinois statute a conviction was sustained where the woman enticed had intercourse with one man only, it appearing that the purpose of the enticement was to induce her to enter a life of indiscriminate prostitution. Slocum v. People, 90 Ill. 274.

The Indiana statute requires such a woman to be enticed "to a house of ill-fame, or elsewhere, for the purpose of prostitution," and the phrase "or elsewhere" implies a place of like character, so that an enticement to a place not of such character for intercourse with a single person is not within the statute. Nichols v. State, 127 Ind. 406.

Under this statute an indictment averring that the female was enticed "for the purpose of unlawfully and feloniously prostituting her" has been held bad. Miller v. State, 121 Ind. 294, the court saying that the phrase used was of doubtful signification, and had no legal and technical meaning whatever.

So an indictment alleging the abduction of a female "for the purpose of having illicit intercourse with her" is bad as leaving out the indiscriminate intercourse which is an element of prostitution. Osborne v. State, 52 Ind. 526.

Same—Vagrancy.—In Reg. v. Rehe, 6 Quebec Q. B. 274, it was held that a woman who was kept by a married man, and who surrendered herself to sexual intercourse to him alone, did not come under the purview of a statute which declared any one to be a vagrant who, having no peaceable profession or calling to maintain herself by, for the most part supported herself by the avails of prostitution. See also the title VAGRANCY.

1. In State v. Rice, 56 Iowa 432, it was held that "incontinence with one or two persons" may constitute a woman a prostitute; and that it is not essential that she should have "submitted her person to illicit sexual intercourse with various persons." See also Springer v. State, 16 Tex. App. 593, set out supra, this definition, note Common Prostitute.

2. Protection.—A Wisconsin statute provides that every person who, as principal contractor, etc., furnishes any material in or about the erection, construction, protection, or removal of any machinery erected or constructed so as to be or become a part of the freehold shall have a lien for such materials. In Standard Oil Co. v. Lane, 75 Wis. 637, the court, per Cole, C. J., said: "It will be noticed that the word protection is used in connection with 'erection, construction, and repairs,' as well as 'removal.' And while the word protect often means to cover, shield, or defend from injury, harm, or danger of any kind, the word imports in the statute something used or furnished for the machinery which not only preserves from injury, but becomes a part of the machinery itself."

Protect and Guarantee.—In Beymer Bauman Lead Co. v. Haynes, 81 Me. 27, it was held that an agreement by a manufacturer and seller of white lead to protect and guarantee a customer on lead meant that the manufacturer would supply the article to his customer as low as the most favorable market price at the time of delivery. Sales or offers exceptionally low for special reasons, not representing the fair market price, were held not to govern.

Landlord and Tenant.—In Peters v. Grubb, 21 Pa. St. 455, an agreement by a lessor "to protect" the lessee in "the use and enjoyment" of the premises, in connection with other words, was held to constitute a covenant for quiet enjoyment. See generally the title LEASES, vol. 18, p. 593.

3. To Protest.—Tombaugh v. Grogg, 156 Ind. 355, quoting Webst. Int. Dict.

Protest in Writing to Payment of Tax.—The clerk of a city treasurer, under oral instructions from a person paying a tax, wrote upon the receipt given therefor, that it was paid under protest, and made a memorandum to that effect on the books of the treasurer. It was held that there was not a "protest in writing" by the person paying, within the Massachusetts statute (Rev. Laws Mass., 1902, c. 13, § 86). Knowles v. Boston, 129 Mass. 551.

Practice—Protest and Exception to Ruling Distinguished.—In Robinson v. State, 152 Ind. 307, it was said: "Protest and 'exception' are not equivalent terms in law. Protested, in the sense conveyed by the record, means an expression of dissent to the act of the court, on the ground of impropriety or illegality, and nothing more. In law, 'exception' has a technical signification. It implies that the exceptant reserves the right to present an adverse ruling to a court having cognizance of error, for review. Its office is to put the decision objected to of record for the information of an appellate tribunal." See also EXCEPT—EXCEPTION, vol. 11, p. 556; OBJECTION—OBJECTION, vol. 21, p. 756.

4. Protestant.—Webst. Dict., followed in Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 10, 57, in which case it was held that the term Protestant includes all Christians who deny the authority of the Pope of Rome, but that the term is not broad enough to include any who do not, nominally at least, assent to the truth of Christianity as a distinct system of religion. See also CATHOLIC, vol. 5, p. 771.

Charities.—A bequest to indigent unmarried Protestant females, residents of B., has been

PROTESTATION. (See also the title PLEAS AT LAW, 16 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 568.)—Where it is expedient to plead, so as to avoid any implied admission of a fact which cannot safely be directly affirmed or denied without falling into duplicity, at common law a protestation was made use of. By this the party interposed an oblique allegation or denial to the fact, protesting (by the gerund protestando) that such a matter did, or did not, exist. The only use of a protestation was that in case the party making it succeeded in the point to be tried he thereby saved to himself the liberty of disputing in another suit the truth of the allegation protested against.¹

Protestant Charitable Institutions must be such as are managed and controlled exclusively by Protestants and are designed for the bestowal of charity among Protestants alone. So held in construing a bequest. Manning v. Robinson, 29 Ont. 483.

2. Protocol.—In Sheldon v. Milmo, 90 Tex. 21, it is said: "Under the Spanish system of conveyancing, 'a public instrument is divided into three classes; the original draft, register or protocol (registro), the original, and the copy. The register is the original draft or writing, which is delivered and remains in the possession of the escribano, which we also call protocol, by which doubts are determined that may be offered with respect to the instruments which are copied from it. The deed which is immediately copied from the protocol is the original which causes faith, inasmuch as it is authorized by the public escribano, before whom it passed, or by him to whom the protocols of the latter have passed, but if another escribano copies it, with the authority of the judge and citation of the party, it is valid. The traslado is called the copy which is taken from this original, which ought to be done with the same circumstances of the latter.'" Azo & Manuel's Institutes, 1 White 297.

4. Proved.—"A fact proved is a fact established by the evidence so as to put it beyond reasonable controversy." Shiver v. Shiver, 45 Ala. 353. See also Kitchen v. Tyson, 3 Murph. (7 N. Car.) 315.

Proved His Debt—Bankruptcy.—See generally the title INSOLVENCY AND BANKRUPTCY, vol. 16, p. 673, and see Matter of Bigelow, 2 Ben. (U. S.) 483.

Deeds. (See the titles ACKNOWLEDGMENTS, vol. 1, p. 483; EXECUTION AND PROOF OF DOCUMENTS, vol. 11, p. 583; RECORDING ACTS.)—The requirement in a Tennessee statute that deeds for lands lying outside the state should "be proved as heretofore" was held to include the solemn authentication of the instrument, either by the acknowledgment of the bargainer or by the proof of witnesses. Knowles v. Masterson, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 671, distinguishing Denn v. Reid, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 524.

Deed of Proof.—A statute provided that deeds of trust should be proved or acknowledged in the same manner as deeds and conveyances of real estate. In construing this provision in Bradford v. Dawson, 2 Ala. 208, the court said: "It is obvious that 'proved or acknowledged' must refer to the recording of the instrument and nothing further."

Account Books Proved by Oath.—See the title DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE, vol. 9, p. 912 et seq. "To Make Out by Oath" and "to Prove" are synonymous expressions. Kitchen v. Tyson, 3 Murph. (7 N. Car.) 315.

Proved in Sense of Offered Evidence.—In Rigin v. Patapsco Ins. Co., 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 295, the statement in the bill of exceptions that the plaintiffs proved such and such facts, was received as meaning nothing more than that they offered evidence thereof.

Statement on Appeal—Uncontradicted Testimony.—Where, in a statement on appeal, instead of setting out the testimony of witnesses, it was said that the plaintiff and the defendant respectively proved certain facts, it was held that, as the parties made no effort to contradict one another on questions of fact, questions of law being alone involved, the form of expression used was a proper one. Wilson v. Hill, 17 Nev. 401.

Wills. (See also the title PROBATE AND LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION, ante, p. 109.)—A statute provided that no written will might be proved after the expiration of five years from the death of the testator. It was held that the statute was intended only to limit the time within which original proof might be made, and that it did not apply to cases of ancillary proof. Matter of Newell, 10 Hawaii 82.

5. Proven and Found.—Upon the margin of the several paragraphs of the findings of a court, the court had written "found" and "not found" instead of proven and "not proven," which were the statutory words. It was contended on appeal that the court below used the word "found" in a strict technical

PROVER. — See APPROVE — APPROVER — APPROVEMENT, vol. 2, p. 519.

PROVIDE — PROVISION. (See also PROVISIO — PROVIDED, post.) — To provide is to procure beforehand for future use; to furnish; to supply; to procure supplies or means of defense; and to make provision is to provide means or supplies. The merchant makes provision for his bills by putting the drawee in funds to pay them. Provision is made for the poor by the raising of moneys for their support. Provision is made for a government by placing at its disposal the ways and means for the payment of its officers and its necessary expenditures.¹ The word "provision" is a word in common use to express the terms, stipulations, and conditions in deeds, contracts, statutes, and constitutions. In law, the word "provision" is a stipulation; a rule provided; a distinct clause in an instrument or statute; a rule or principle to be referred to for guidance; as, the provisions of law, the provisions of the constitution, etc.²

sense, and not as synonymous with proven, regarding the paragraphs marked "not found" simply as immaterial. But it was held that the judge used "found" as meaning proven, and "not found" as signifying "not proven." Ketchum v. Packer, 65 Conn. 544.

1. Provide. — Huber v. People, 49 N. Y. 136.

To provide means to make ready; to prepare; to furnish; to supply; to secure beforehand; to procure as suitable or necessary. Swartz v. Lake County, (Ind. 1902) 63 N. E. Rep. 34.

Provided and Prepared. — A New York election act declared that "none but ballots provided in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be counted." In People v. Wood, 148 N. Y. 148, it was said: "It is impossible to suppose that the legislature used the word provided as synonymous with 'prepared,' so as to visit upon voters a forfeiture of the franchise if an official should make any departure in preparing the ballot from the strict authority conferred upon him."

Providing — Buying — Acquiring. — A statute enacted that no new burial ground should be provided and used within certain specified limits, without the approval of the secretary of state. In construing this provision Lindley, M. R., said: "'Buying' and providing are not synonymous expressions. Providing may include buying, but it must include acquiring; you cannot provide a thing without acquiring it, but a burial ground may be acquired without buying. The words 'in providing,' which occur in the proviso in section 30, to which I have already alluded, can hardly mean buying or acquiring. They point to a later stage in the process of rendering the land referred to fit for a burial ground." Ward v. Portsmouth, (1898) 2 Ch. 200.

Where a statute made it the duty of a board of county commissioners to provide a suitable and convenient place for holding the Superior Court, it was held that the board had discretion either to lease some suitable house or to purchase a site and erect a building for the use of the court. Swartz v. Lake County, (Ind. 1902) 63 N. E. Rep. 34.

Pauper. — The constitution of a state provided that the counties of the state should provide as might be prescribed by law for those inhabitants who by reason of age, infirmity, or misfortune might have a claim upon the sympathy and aid of society. It was held that to provide for paupers meant to feed and clothe and house them, and that an act to establish and maintain a state asylum for the indigent poor was in plain conflict with this provision of the constitution. State v. Halllock, 14 Nev. 205.

2. Provision. — Snyder v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co., 59 N. J. L. 548, quoting Cent. Dict., and holding that there was no distinction between the phrase "any provision or condition of the policy" and the words "terms and conditions of insurance."

Provision as Equivalent to Bequest, Deeds of Trust, or Conveyances. — Jolliffe v. Fanning, 10 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 198.

Wills. (See also the title WILLS.) — A statute provided that a husband who was not a tenant by curtesy should, if his wife did not provide otherwise by her will, hold one-half of her lands for his life. In construing this provision the court said: "The expression in the Stat. of 1877, c. 83, 'unless the wife shall by will provide otherwise,' and in the Pub. Stat., c. 124, § 1, 'if his wife does not provide otherwise by her will,' does not intend a provision for the husband, but a provision in relation to the property." Burke v. Colbert, 144 Mass. 162.

Same — Provision for Children. — A statute enacted that in order that a will should be valid as to children, such children should be named or provided for therein. It was held, where a married woman gave all her property to her husband, providing that if he should marry again after her death the property should belong to her child or children, that this was not a provision for the children within the meaning of the statute. Purdy v. Davis, 13 Wash. 164.

A will made in extremis bequeathed two-thirds of the estate to the testator's wife while she remained his widow, and upon remarriage one-half of the bequest was to go "to her heir." The testator had no living children, but knew that his wife was pregnant. It was held that such bequest to the unborn child was either a provision for such child or showed that the testator intended to make no provision for him. Verrinder v. Winter, 98 Wis. 287.

So in Rhodes v. Weldy, 46 Ohio St. 234, it was held that a contingent remainder did not constitute a provision for a child. But see contra, Osborn v. Jefferson Nat. Bank, 116 Ill. 130.

PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY. — See the title QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT, post.

PROVISIONAL. — See note 1.

PROVISIONAL REMEDY. — A provisional remedy is a remedy provided for present need or for the occasion; one adapted to meet a particular exigency.²

PROVISIONS. (See also the title EXEMPTIONS (FROM EXECUTION), vol. 12, p. 114.) — The ordinary meaning of the word "provisions" is food, victuals, eatables.³

In Bower v. Bower, 5 Wash. 227, it was said: "The positive provisions of our statute are that the children must be named or provided for in the will. What is meant by the term 'provided for,' as so used? In our opinion, it refers to some beneficial legal provision, and we are unable to agree with the contention of the respondent that such children can be said to have been provided for by an absolute devise to another, even although the testator thought that the interests of the children would be better subserved by such devise than by one directly to them."

In Matter of Barker, 5 Wash. 391, it was said: "Under our statute (§ 1465, Gen. Stat.), there must be some substantial provision for the children of which they legally avail themselves, or else there must be an actual naming of such children in the will, or the same will be ineffectual as against such children."

1. Provisional. — In De Haro v. U. S., 5 Wall. (U. S.) 628, it was said: "The term provisional excludes the idea of permanency; it means something temporary and for the occasion."

A Provisional Committee. — A provisional committee is an association formed for carrying into effect the preliminary arrangements necessary to promote a scheme; it is not a partnership, for it constitutes no agreement to share in profit or loss. Reynell v. Lewis, 15 M. & W. 517, 16 L. J. Exch. 25.

Provisional Appointment. — See State v. Lovell, 70 Miss. 318.

2. Provisional Remedy. — In McCarthy v. McCarthy, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 579, an order authorizing a substituted or constructive service of a summons was held not to be an order granting a provisional remedy, although the court held that in a broad sense the term provisional remedy would include every special order out of the usual course in the progress of an action.

The order which, in Wisconsin, is a substitute for a bill of discovery is a provisional remedy, and as such is appealable under the statute (now Stat. Wis. 1898, § 3069, subdiv. 3) which gives an appeal from an order that grants a provisional remedy. Noonan v. Orton, 28 Wis. 386. See also Blossom v. Ludington, 31 Wis. 283.

The approval of a plaintiff's undertaking by the sheriff in an action of claim and delivery of personal property has been held not to be the allowance of a provisional remedy within the New York statute (now Code Civ. Proc., § 416) which declares that from the time of the allowance of a provisional remedy, the court acquires jurisdiction and has control of all subsequent proceedings. Nosser v. Corwin, (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 36 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 540.

3. Provisions. — State v. Angelo, (N. H. 1902) 51 Atl. Rep. 906,

Not Confined to Food for Man. — Gundling v. Chicago, 176 Ill. 346.

Fat Cattle have been held to be provisions within the meaning of Act Cong. July 7, 1812, prohibiting American vessels from trading with the enemy. U. S. v. Barber, 9 Cranch (U. S.) 243; U. S. v. Sheldon, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 119.

Fruits. — The term provisions has been held to include fruits, as used in a statute providing for the licensing of peddlers. State v. Angelo, (N. H. 1902) 51 Atl. Rep. 906.

Groceries Kept for Sale. — In In re Lentz, 97 Fed. Rep. 487, it was said: "Provisions mean articles of food stored at home, or growing in the fields for home consumption; not canned beans, peas, tomatoes, corn beef, sardines, or red herring kept for sale by a mercantile firm of which the debtor is a member." And see the title EXEMPTIONS (FROM EXECUTION), vol. 12, pp. 114, 115.

Ice Peddler. — In Com. v. Reid, 175 Mass. 325, it was said: "The word provisions means food, victuals, fare, provender. Ice is neither food, victuals, fare, nor provender."

Money and Supplies. — As used in Rev. Code Ala., in force in 1875, § 1858, giving a lien for advances to make a crop, provisions was held to mean food for man and beast employed in making the crop, and not to include money or supplies to pay the hire of laborers. McLester v. Somerville, 54 Ala. 675.

Oleomargarine. — In Com. v. Lutton, 157 Mass. 392, it was held that oleomargarine and butterine were provisions. The court said: "The word includes all articles of food."

Tobacco—Cigarettes. — A statute provided that municipalities should have the power to regulate the sale of meats, poultry, fish, butter, cheese, lard, vegetables, and all other provisions. It was held that the term "all other provisions" could extend only to articles of the same character as those specifically enumerated, and therefore did not extend to cigarettes. Gundling v. Chicago, 176 Ill. 340.

Wines and Liquors. — The owners of a tavern employed an agent to keep the tavern and empowered him to purchase, use, and vend all necessary provisions for such house. It was held that the agent was authorized to purchase spirituous liquors, wines, and sugar on the credit of the owners. Cummings v. Sargent, 9 Met. (Mass.) 172. And that the term includes wine and brandy, see Mooney v. Evans, 6 Ired. L. (41 N. Car.) 363.

Wood and Coal—Provisions and Stores. — A New York statute (2 Rev. Stat. 493, § 1) gave a lien and summary remedy for debts created by masters of vessels for such "provisions and stores furnished within this state as may be fit and proper for the use of such vessel," etc.

PROVISO—PROVIDED. (See also PROVIDE, ante, and see the titles DEEDS, vol. 9, p. 87; STATUTES; WILLS.)—A proviso is, in deeds and statutes, a limitation or exception to a grant made or authority conferred, the effect of which is to declare that the one shall not operate, or the other be exercised, unless in the case provided.¹ The words "proviso" and "provided" are apt words to create a condition.² But though their usual, this is not their invariable, effect; and they may be shown by the context to express simply a covenant or limitation.³

In Crooke v. Slack, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 177, the court, per Nelson, C. J., said: "The word provisions, strictly considered, would be confined to such articles as enter into the food or subsistence for hands and passengers, but 'stores' is a more general term;" and it was held that stores might include wood or coal.

1. Proviso.—Austin v. U. S., 155 U. S. 431; Minis v. U. S., 15 Pet. (U. S.) 445; Voorhees v. Jackson, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 471; Carroll v. State, 58 Ala. 401; Stockton v. Weber, 98 Cal. 440; Sloat v. McComb, 42 N. J. L. 485. See also Farmers' Bank v. Hale, 59 N. Y. 53; Clark Thread Co. v. Kearney Twp., 55 N. J. L. 44; Sherman v. Santa Barbara County, 59 Cal. 483.

Provided Does Not Necessarily Import Proviso.—In Carroll v. State, 58 Ala. 401, it was said: "It does not necessarily follow, because the term provided is used, that which may succeed it is a proviso, though that is the form in which an exception is generally made to or a restraint or qualification imposed on the enacting clause. It is the matter of the succeeding words, and not the form, which determines whether it is or not a technical proviso."

Proviso and Exception Distinguished.—See EXCEPT—EXCEPTION, vol. II, pp. 555, 556. See also Rowell v. Janvrin, 151 N. Y. 60. Compare Sherman v. Santa Barbara County, 59 Cal. 484.

2. Condition. (See also the titles CONDITIONS, vol. 6, p. 499; STATUTES; WILLS.)—Atkinson v. Turner, 2 Atk. 41; Stockton v. Weber, 98 Cal. 440; Sherman v. Santa Barbara County, 59 Cal. 483; Hill v. Decatur, 22 Ga. 206; Turner v. Forsyth, 78 Ga. 686; Gibert v. Peteler, 38 N. Y. 168; Raley v. Umatilla County, 15 Oregon 172.

"There is no word more proper to express a condition than the word provided, and it shall always be so taken, unless it appears from the context to be the intent of the parties that it shall constitute a covenant." Rich v. Atwater, 16 Conn. 419.

A statute enacted that the directors of the poor might bring an action for the recovery of a bet on election, provided that the right be exercised within a certain fixed time. In construing this statute in Forscht v. Green, 53 Pa. St. 140, the court said: "Undoubtedly, the word provided generally creates a condition; and while it may and often does express an exceptional or different meaning, we feel satisfied that that is not the case here."

Same — Provide.—In State v. Zeigler, 46 N. J. L. 311, it was said: "While the word provide is in the present tense, which ordinarily indicates present time, the context plainly shows that it is here used conditionally, and that the time indicated by it is not restricted to the present, but by relation includes the future as well."

Same — Providing in Sense of Provided.—A testator gave a certain sum to his son "providing the said amount and interest is collected from the assets or stockholders of said bank." In construing this bequest the court said: "Manifestly, the word providing is used in the sense of provided, and means upon condition, or with the understanding, that said two thousand dollars shall be collected out of that debt." Smith's Appeal, 103 Pa. St. 562.

3. Does Not Invariably Express Condition.—"This word (proviso) hath divers operations. Sometime it worketh a qualification or limitation; * * * sometime a condition; and sometime a covenant." Co. Litt. 146b. See also Co. Litt. 203b; Cromwell's Case, 2 Coke 69; Stanley v. Colt, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 166; Woodruff v. Woodruff, 44 N. J. Eq. 353.

"Provided is an apt word to create a condition. Yet * * * it does not necessarily import a condition, and it is often used by way of limitation or qualification only, especially when it does not introduce a new clause, but only serves to qualify or restrain the generality of a former clause." Chapin v. Harris, 8 Allen (Mass.) 596.

Trust.—A testator gave the residue of his estate to a certain charitable institution, "provided the trustees and managers of said homes admit and receive into said homes, during the existence or continuance of said homes, one aged man or one aged woman each and every year." It was contended that the word provided following the gift to the homes created and was intended to create a trust in favor of indefinite beneficiaries. The court refused to sustain this contention, saying: "The word provided may denote a trust when the context justifies such a rendering. But obviously this can only occur when, apart from the word itself, the intention to fasten a trust on the gift is apparent." Bennett v. Baltimore Humane Impartial Soc., 91 Md. 20.

Contingent Estate.—A testatrix bequeathed and devised her estate to her daughter, provided that such daughter died leaving issue or did not die before reaching the age of twenty-one years. In construing this provision the court said: "If the first article of the will stood alone, there could be no question but that the daughter took a contingent estate only. The word provided is an apt and appropriate word to indicate an intention to give contingently; yet words literally contingent in their meaning and import must bend to the construction in favor of vesting the estate or interest, if the will, in its other parts and features, shows that such was the intention of the testator." Hersey v. Purington, (Me. 1902) 51 Atl. Rep. 866.

PROVOCATION. (See also the titles MURDER AND MANSLAUGHTER, vol. 21, pp. 162, 174 et seq.; SELF-DEFENSE.)—Provocation is that which provokes or excites passion.¹

PROVOKE.—To provoke means to excite to anger or passion; exasperate; irritate; enrage.²

PROWL.—See note 3.

In State v. Workman, 39 S. Car. 153, the trial court said: "A legal provocation means some injury, or at least some indignity offered to the person of another."

In State v. Ellis, 74 Mo. 217, it was said: "The words 'reasonable,' 'adequate,' 'sufficient,' 'lawful,' and 'legal' are used interchangeably in connection with the word provocation in defining manslaughter." See also State v. Kotovsky, 74 Mo. 247.

2. Provoke.—Cent. Dict., quoted in Casner v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1901) 62 S. W. Rep. 915; Cook v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1901) 63 S. W. Rep. 874.

Upon an indictment under a Connecticut statute (now Gen. Stat. 1888, § 1509) for breach of the peace, the court, construing the word provoke, said: "To provoke is to excite, to stimulate, to arouse." State v. Warner, 34 Conn. 279.

3. Prowl—False Imprisonment.—In an action to recover damages for false imprisonment it appeared that the warrant on which the plaintiff was arrested was issued upon a deposition made by the defendant, which, after stating facts showing the commission of a burglary in the nighttime, stated that the deponent believed the offense to have been committed by the accused from the fact that at about the time of its commission the accused was prowling around the premises. It was held that, giving to the word prowl the full effect of its general meaning, viz., "to rove or wander stealthily, as one in search of plunder," the statement of facts was sufficient to justify the magistrate in determining that there was reasonable ground to believe the accused guilty of the crime charged; that consequently, the deposition gave to the magistrate jurisdiction to issue the warrant; that the warrant was a protection to the defendant; and that the action for false imprisonment could not be maintained. Swart v. Rickard, 148 N. Y. 264.

CROSS-REFERENCES.

See the titles BY-LAWS, vol. 5, p. 86; VOTING TRUSTS.

I. DEFINITION. — The term "proxy" is used in several senses: first, to designate a person deputed to represent another; second, the office or authority of the deputy; and, third, the document setting forth his authority.¹

II. RIGHT TO VOTE BY PROXY — 1. At Common Law — a. GENERAL RULE. — The rule of the common law was that unless the right was expressly conferred, a member of a corporation could not vote by proxy, such right being considered as not necessarily incident to the corporate rights of members.² The rule had its origin in reasons peculiarly applicable to the earlier forms of corporations, namely, municipal and charitable corporations. Membership with these was coupled with no pecuniary interest. The voting privilege was of the nature of a personal trust committed to the discretion of the member as an individual, and hence not susceptible to exercise through delegation.³

b. EXCEPTIONS. — This method of voting was, however, allowable in the case of the peers of England, and this was said to be in virtue of a special permission of the crown.⁴ Where stock is held jointly by executors, administrators, trustees, or other persons acting in a fiduciary capacity, they have the right to designate one of their number to represent at corporate meetings the interest held by them.⁵

2. Under Statutes and By-laws — a. WHERE RIGHT EXPRESSLY CONFERRED BY STATUTE. — A statute or charter provision expressly giving the right to vote by proxy is, of course, unobjectionable. And at present, in perhaps all jurisdictions, such laws obtain, some imposing certain conditions and limitations, others giving the right unrestricted.⁶

b. WHETHER EXPRESS STATUTORY AUTHORIZATION ESSENTIAL. — A question of some difficulty is whether express statutory authority is necessary; in other words, whether, in case the act of incorporation neither confers upon nor denies to members the right to vote by proxy, being silent upon the subject, power to pass a by-law conferring it is implied. The question first arose in a Connecticut case, wherein it was decided affirmatively,⁷ but later it was resolved negatively by the New Jersey court.⁸ The rule of the former case has the

7. Case of State v. Tudor. — A by-law of a corporation whose object is the acquisition of property, which authorizes stockholders in all their meetings to vote by proxy, is valid. Quare, whether the stockholders could vote by proxy in the absence of such by-law. State v. Tudor, 5 Day (Conn.) 329, 5 Am. Dec. 162. In this case there was no provision empowering the members to vote by proxy, but there was given the power to "establish such by-laws and regulations as they may deem necessary for the government of the corporation, not contrary to the charter or the laws of this state." The court said: "So much, however, I think, may be said, that those incorporated societies whose object is the acquisition of property stand on a different ground as to this question from those of every other kind; that is to say, it is not so clear that every vote given in a corporation of the former kind must be personal, as it is that it must be so in one of the latter."

8. Case of Taylor v. Griswold. — Here the corporation was, by a general clause of its charter, support of both authority and reason,¹ though a very respectable court has intimated its preference for the rule of the latter case.² The rule of the Connecticut case is promotive of convenience, and has to recommend it that it allows members of a private corporation instituted for merely private purposes to regulate their manner of voting in a way to suit their own sense of convenience and interest.³ And, furthermore, the reasons of the common-law rule have no substantial foundation, in so far as they relate to modern trading corporations. Suffrage and the right to representation in the elections and other affairs of such institutions stand upon essentially different foundations.⁴

c. BY-LAWS RESTRICTIVE OF CHARTER PRIVILEGE. — A by-law purporting to restrict in any manner the privilege of voting by proxy, conferred upon the members by the act of incorporation, is void and of no effect.⁵ This principle has been applied to by-laws requiring proxies to be executed and attested in a designated manner,⁶ or confining the right of selection as proxies to persons who are stockholders,⁷ or subjecting those offering to vote to "a sort of inquisitorial examination."⁸

3. Effect of Long-continued Usage. — A long-continued and unbroken usage of proxy voting has been considered as having all the effect of a by-law until regularly revoked.⁹

III. WHO MAY APPOINT OR BE APPOINTED — 1. Who May Appoint — a. RECORD OWNER. — The owner of the legal title to stock, as disclosed by the transfer books of the company, is the one authorized to delegate the right to vote on the stock.¹⁰

b. DIRECTOR OR TRUSTEE. — In the absence of authority in the charter or by-laws, a director or trustee of a corporation cannot vote by proxy, for the reason that the corporation is entitled to the personal judgment, influence, and vote of each director.¹¹ authorized to make by-laws for its government, provided they were not repugnant to the law of the land; and it was held that as the common law required all votes to be given in person, and that being a part of the law of the land, a by-law authorizing voting by proxy was repugnant thereto and consequently void. Taylor v. Griswold, 14 N. J. L. 222, 27 Am. Dec. 33. See also Cone v. Russell, 48 N. J. Eq. 213.

In California it is competent for a corporation to provide by its by-laws that stockholders may vote by proxy at all meetings of the stockholders, and a provision of this kind authorizes proxy voting at a meeting authorizing bonded indebtedness. Market St. R. Co. v. Hellman, 109 Cal. 571.

2. Term "Present" Construed. — In Brown v. Com., 3 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 209, the court, while not deciding the question, intimated that stockholders could not vote by proxy in the absence of a special charter provision permitting them to do so. In this case a provision that "each person being present at the election" shall be entitled to vote was held not to authorize voting by proxy. The court considered that the term "present" contemplated an actual, not a constructive, presence. See also Cone v. Russell, 48 N. J. Eq. 213.

9. Usage. — Walker v. Johnson, 17 App. Cas. (D. C.) 144.

10. Successor to Bank Cashier—Stock in Latter's Name Followed by Word "Cashier." — Where on the transfer books appeared the name of a certain person with the term "cashier" thereto subjoined, as the owner of certain shares, the shares could be voted upon only by such person or his duly authorized agent, and a proxy from another person would not confer such authority although accompanied with proof that he was the successor of the first-named person as cashier, and had authority to act and vote in his place in reference to all stock standing in his name as cashier. The court considered that though it should be admitted that the word "cashier" indicated that the stock was held in trust, nevertheless no one but the trustee in whose name the stock stood, or his duly authorized agent, was authorized to vote it. Matter of Mohawk, etc., R. Co., 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 135.

c. CORPORATION OWNING STOCK. — Whenever a corporation may own stock in another company, there is no legal objection to the corporation giving a proxy to vote stock which it in fact owns.¹

d. ALIEN STOCKHOLDER. — Where by the terms of the act of incorporation the right to vote by proxy is given to "each stockholder being a citizen," an alien stockholder has no right to vote by proxy.²

e. HOLDER OF STOCK ENJOINED FROM VOTING IT. — Where the holder of stock is enjoined from voting it directly, on the ground of public policy, he cannot be permitted to vote it by proxy.³

2. Who May Be Appointed — a. OFFICER OF CORPORATE OWNER. — The secretary of a corporation that owns stock in another corporation may be constituted the proxy to vote such stock.⁴

b. UNDER NATIONAL BANK LAWS. — By the National Bank Laws "no officer, clerk, teller, or bookkeeper of such association shall act as proxy."⁵ While there has been no judicial decision in regard to the matter, the present view of the comptroller's office is that by the term "officer" a director is precluded from acting, as well as the president, cashier, or other like executive officer.⁶ Formerly, however, the contrary opinion obtained in this department.⁶

IV. FORMAL REQUISITES — 1. No Particular Form Necessary. — A stockholder who desires to delegate his right to vote should furnish his representative with such written evidence as will reasonably assure the inspectors that the agent is acting by the authority of his principal, but the power need not be in any prescribed form nor be executed with any particular formality. It is sufficient if it appears on its face to confer the requisite authority, and is free from all reasonable grounds of suspicion of its genuineness and authenticity.⁷

2. Presumption of Regularity. — Where at the time of the election the objection was as to the right of voting by proxy, and none was made as to the form, execution, or validity of the proxies themselves, it was held on quo warranto against the directors elected that in the absence of proof that the persons executing the proxies were members of the society and that the proxies were properly executed, it would be presumed that the proxies were regular and proper.⁸

3. Description of Stockholder. — Although a form of proxy is prescribed, but there is nothing to show that such form must be literally followed, a description of the person giving the proxy as a "proprietor of shares," instead of as a "member," is immaterial.⁹

4. Description of Corporation. — It is immaterial that the designation in the

by the vote of a director so made, it was nevertheless held that this did not authorize the interference of equity. Here the corporation was not organized to make money, but merely to establish and maintain a high school.

Winding Up Proceedings — Proxies by Telegraph. — In In re English, etc., Chartered Bank, (1893) 3 Ch. 385, a chartered banking company the principal business of which was in Australia stopped payment and was ordered to be wound up in England. The judge made an order directing a form of proxy to be sent by the official receiver by telegraph to Australia, where the large majority of the creditors lived, appointing certain persons to vote upon a proposed scheme of reconstruction; the proxy papers were to be executed by the Australian creditors and deposited at the offices of the company by a certain day, and the particulars and numbers of the proxies for and against the scheme were to be telegraphed to the official receiver. This course was considered proper under the circumstances.

proxy of the corporation is not literally correct, when the same name appeared in the notice of meeting and there is no pretense that any stockholder was misled.¹

5. Effect of Blanks — Power to Fill. — Where a proxy is in proper form, save that the day of the month of the meeting is left blank because the exact date had not been fixed when the proxy was given, and the intention of the owner of the stock is unmistakable, the proxy is unobjectionable.² And it was so held of a proxy in which the day and month of its execution were blank.³ And it has been held that the person to whom a proxy is given may fill a blank with regard to the day of the month,⁴ or the name of the person who is to exercise the privilege,⁵ even at the moment when the proxies are presented to the inspectors, and the right to vote thereon is claimed.

6. Acknowledgment — Filing — Attestation. — It has been held that where a proxy is subscribed by a subscribing witness it may not be rejected because it is not acknowledged or proved.⁶ A statutory provision that proxies should be "duly filed" has been held to be directory only.⁷ But in an English case a clause in the articles requiring the signature of the stockholder to a proxy to be attested was adjudged to be not merely directory, but under such clause attestation was essential to the validity of the proxy.⁸

V. RIGHTS AND POWERS OF PROXY — 1. General Rule — Acts Binding on Principal. — Where a proxy is duly constituted, and there is no limitation upon his power, a vote by such proxy binds the owner of the stock to the same extent as if cast by the latter personally.⁹

2. When Authority Limited. — When the authority conferred is restricted to a particular purpose, a vote for another and different purpose is unauthorized. To illustrate: A proxy to vote for the election of directors simply, carries no right to vote to ratify a sale of corporate property made by the directors.¹⁰ And where the authority is to vote upon the question of increase of the capital stock, a vote upon the matter of disposing of such increase of

1. Langan v. Francklyn, (Brooklyn City Ct. Spec. T.) 29 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 102. In the notice and proxy the words "of East New York" were added to the corporate title, "Union Gaslight Company."

2. Blanks. — Matter of Townshend, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 46 N. Y. St. Rep. 135.

3. Matter of St. Lawrence Steamboat Co., 44 N. J. L. 529.

4. Matter of Townshend, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 46 N. Y. St. Rep. 135. In this case and the one following there was no doubt as to the intention of the stockholder.

Although the name of the proxy was left blank by the maker of the power, and the blank was filled by the holder of the proxy immediately before the election, in the absence of any challenge by the maker it will be presumed that the name of the proxy was written in the blank by the authority of such maker. White v. New York State Agricultural Soc., 45 Hun (N. Y.) 581.

Blank Filled by Secretary — Stamp Act — In Ernest v. Loma Gold Mines, (1897) 1 Ch. 1, accompanying a notice of an extraordinary general meeting of stockholders was a circular signed by the secretary and emanating from the chairman and directors, with a form of proxy to be returned, and various proxies were returned (duly stamped) signed by the shareholders, but omitting the day and hour of the meeting; the secretary filled up these particulars before the proxies were lodged with the company. The proxies were held to be valid within section 80 of the Stamp Act of 1891, which requires the date of meeting to be specified.

5. Ex p. Lancaster, 5 Ch. D. 911. In this case the proxy was given by a creditor to his solicitor with verbal authority to use it for him in the matter of a bankruptcy. Compare Howard v. Hill, 5 R. & Corp. L. J. 255.

6. Acknowledgment. — Matter of St. Lawrence Steamboat Co., 44 N. J. L. 529.

7. Filing. — Farwell v. Houghton Copper Works, 8 Fed. Rep. 66.

8. Attestation — Repeal of Regulation. — Harben v. Phillips, 23 Ch. D. 14. In this case the articles of association provided for voting by proxy, and declared that the instrument appointing a proxy should be in writing under the hand of the appointor and should be attested by one or more witness or witnesses, and prescribed a form of proxy containing an attestation clause. By special resolution the article prescribing the form of proxy was repealed and a new form given without an attestation clause, but the resolution did not purport to repeal the article requiring attestation of the signature of the appointor. It was held that the provision requiring the signature to be attested remained in force.

stock is unwarranted.¹ Likewise a proxy given for the purpose of voting upon the question of issuance of "bonds" merely, confers no authority to vote for "third mortgage bonds."²

3. Transactions Outside Scope of Articles. — Where the deed of association commits the company affairs to a committee of shareholders, called managing directors, who are authorized to vote by proxy, a director so represented at a meeting is not bound by a resolution imposing obligations outside the scope of the deed.³

4. Fundamental Changes in Organization. — Proxies conferring ordinary powers will not authorize votes for radical and fundamental changes in the organization, or for the dissolution thereof and the formation of a new one.⁴

5. Fraud or Bad Faith. — It cannot be said that a proxy was voted fraudulently and in bad faith, because in one view the vote was contrary to the principal's interest, where in another and broader view it was for the best interests of the company.⁵

6. Notice to Proxy Is Notice to Stockholder. — In accordance with a familiar principle of agency,⁶ a stockholder who is represented by proxy is chargeable with notice of all matters connected with the proceedings of the meeting which were known to his proxy.⁷

7. Waiver of Irregularities. — Under a proxy general in character and without limit as to time or any specific acts, the stockholder is estopped by the vote of his representative as regards any irregularity in the proceedings or calls of the meeting which could have been waived by himself if personally present.⁸

8. Right to Demand Poll — Method of Counting in Absence of Poll. — In England it has been held that where, under the articles, a poll may be demanded by "shareholders qualified to vote and holding" a specified number of shares, a holder of proxies is not within the meaning of the provision, and a poll had upon the demand of such a one is illegal.⁹ And in the event no poll is demanded, but there is simply a show of hands, the vote of each member who also holds proxies is to be counted as a single vote, and not as a vote for each of the members so represented;¹⁰ but if the proxy is a non-member and represents only one person, the proxy's vote should be counted.¹¹

9. Right to Vote on Motions to Ballot or Adjourn. — The general rule is that a person holding a proxy may do all that a stockholder may do in the matter, and accordingly may vote on motions to take a ballot or to adjourn.¹²

10. Ruling of Chairman Against Proxy's Right to Vote. — The holder of a proxy, who, upon the expression by the chairman of the meeting of an opinion unfavorable to his right to vote, does not offer to vote or present his claim to the meeting so that it may be passed upon, cannot claim that his right to vote was excluded, but must be taken to have voluntarily refrained from voting.¹³

5. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Assoc. v. Taylor, 99 Va. 208. Here the proxy represented a member of a mutual life insurance company and voted for a large increase in the assessment upon members of the class to which his principal belonged; but it appeared that the increase was necessary to keep the company alive.

11. Duration of Authority. — A proxy in the usual form confers authority to act only at the meeting then in contemplation, and may not be voted at another and different meeting resolved upon subsequently to the time of the one originally contemplated.¹

VI. COMPELLING EXECUTION OF PROXY — 1. To Receiver. — Where a receiver has been appointed on a creditor's bill, and the property includes corporate stock, the court may order the judgment debtor to execute a proxy to the receiver so as to enable him to vote at a stockholders' meeting.²

2. To Pledgor — Laches. — And equity will, in a proper case, compel a pledgee of stock to give the pledgor a proxy.³ But the pledgor may disentitle himself to such relief by long-continued acquiescence or laches.⁴

3. To Testamentary Co-trustee. — Where trustees of stock for certain life beneficiaries were, by the will creating the trust, directed to give one of their number a proxy to vote the stock, upon their refusal to do so they were required by the court to execute the proxy.⁵

VII. REVOCATION OF PROXY — 1. When About to Be Used for Improper Purpose. — The owner of stock may revoke his proxy where it is about to be used for a fraudulent purpose, although given for a valuable consideration.⁶

2. When Coupled with Power of Sale. — It has been held that where a stockholder deposits his stock with a director with authority to vote upon it and to sell it, such power is, before sale, revocable.⁷

3. Validity of Irrevocable Proxy. — An irrevocable proxy reserving certain privileges to the owner of the stock in regard to the manner of dealing in it, and withdrawing from the ownership, is not contrary to public policy or in any wise open to objection.⁸ An agreement between joint owners of stock whereby one was constituted a proxy to vote the shares, such proxy to be irrevocable for ten years, unless its revocation was assented to by both parties before that time, was held not void as against public policy.⁹ In New York, where by statute a proxy is revocable at the pleasure of the person executing it, it is held that parties cannot by agreement create a proxy irrevocable in its nature, for to do this would be to repeal an act of legislature.¹⁰

1. Howard v. Hill, 5 R. & Corp. L. J. 255. In this case there was to be an election to the post of surgeon in a hospital. The meeting originally designated fell through for some reason, and another meeting was resolved upon and held, at which one of the original candidates withdrew and another was substituted in his place.

2. Compelling Execution of Proxy. — Atkinson v. Foster, 27 Ill. App. 63.

3. Vowell v. Thompson, 3 Cranch (C. C.) 428; Matter of Argus Printing Co., 1 N. Dak. 434, 26 Am. St. Rep. 639; Hoppin v. Buffum, 9 R. I. 513, 11 Am. Rep. 291.

4. Hoppin v. Buffum, 9 R. I. 513, 11 Am. Rep. 291. In this case it was held that after long-continued acquiescence in the control of the stock by the pledgee, who was the record owner, and failure to inform the corporation that he (the pledgor) was the owner until a contested election occurred, and even then not until the votes were being counted or had been counted, it was too late to ask equitable interference with the result of the election as declared.

5. Trustees. — Lafferty's Estate, 154 Pa. St. 430. Here a testator gave stock to trustees for certain life beneficiaries, and directed that at all elections of the corporation the stock should be voted as his son, one of the trustees, should appoint, and also directed the trustees to give a proxy to vote the stock as the son might desire to vote it. At the time of the testator's death the son was president of the corporation. The two trustees refused to execute the proxy as directed by the will, and the son applied to the Orphans' Court for an order compelling them to do so; that court found that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the allegation that the voting trustee intended to make a fraudulent use of the proxy, and granted the order prayed for. On appeal to the Supreme Court it was held by an equally divided court that the decree of the lower court should be affirmed.

6. Fraudulent Use of Proxy. — Reed v. Newburgh Bank, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 337. Here the court said: "I think he was also right in revoking the proxy and voting upon the hypothecated stock himself, and this without referring to the question whether the agreement to give the complainant a proxy to vote upon the hypothecated stock was not void as against public policy."

9. Hey v. Dolphin, 92 Hun (N. Y.) 230.

10. New York Statute. — Matter of Germicide Co., 65 Hun (N. Y.) 607. And it was held that a proxy coupled with an interest, and therefore irrevocable, was void.

In Hey v. Dolphin, 92 Hun (N. Y.) 230, it

VIII. RESTRAINING PROXY FROM VOTING — Fraud on Statute. — An injunction will be granted to restrain the voting by proxy, where this form of voting has been resorted to in fraud of the act of incorporation.¹

Breach of Trust — Public Policy. — Where executors and trustees who held certain stock, in pursuance of an agreement with certain of the members, executed to the latter a proxy irrevocable for a limited period, and they in consideration thereof agreed to so vote as that one of the former should be continuously engaged as manager at a specified salary, the use of the proxy was enjoined.²

Federal Court — Stockholders' Meeting in Another State. — A federal court sitting in one state will not restrain by injunction the voting by proxy at a stockholders' meeting to be held in another state, on the ground that such manner of voting was legal only when expressly authorized by statute, and that there was no such statute in the latter state.³

Arrangement Alleged to Create Trust. — Where the corporate officers obtained from stockholders deposits of stock, together with proxies authorizing them, among other things, to sell the corporate property and to vote such stock at a stockholders' meeting, a single stockholder may not restrain the voting on the stock of others so deposited upon the theory that such transaction created a trust for the corporation, in the absence of a showing that what was done in this behalf was done with corporate funds for the corporation.⁴

IX. REJECTION OF PROXY — Result of Election Changed. — If the result of an election is changed by an improper refusal to accept proxies and to permit the holders to vote thereon, a new election may be ordered.⁵

Proxy Regular on Its Face. — Where a proxy, apparently executed by the stockholder and regular in form, is presented to the inspectors, it is not competent for them to refuse to receive the vote, or to assume to themselves the power of a judicial tribunal to try its genuineness. If for any reason not apparent upon its face the instrument is invalid, redress must be sought from the courts after the election, if by its reception any detriment was done.⁶

Unauthorized By-law. — The act of inspectors in rejecting proxies because the holders refused to make oath to causes of challenge and to submit to "a sort of inquisitorial examination at variance with the fundamental principles of our civil and political institutions, at the pleasure of the inspectors," in pursuance of an unauthorized by-law, was held unauthorized and void.⁷

X. AGREEMENT NOT TO VOTE BY PROXY. — An agreement among certain shareholders that no one of them should vote by proxy has been held to be pernicious and unlawful.⁸

was held that § 21, c. 687, N. Y. Laws of 1892, providing, among other things, that every proxy shall be revocable at the pleasure of the person executing it, did not apply to the agreement involved therein, which was made before the enactment of the statute, and that it would seem that if the statute were to be allowed a retrospective effect, it would not apply to the case of a proxy on stock so situated that neither owner could vote on it without the consent of the other.

1. Injunction. — Webb v. Ridgely, 38 Md. 364.

2. Cone v. Russell, 48 N. J. Eq. 208. The reasons assigned were that the arrangement was against public policy and also constituted a breach of trust.

3. In Woodruff v. Dubuque, etc., R. Co., 30 Fed. Rep. 91, the court held that it would be presumed that the officers would proceed according to law, and that even if they did not the complainant would still have an adequate remedy.

4. Woodruff v. Dubuque, etc., R. Co., 30 Fed. Rep. 91.

5. Rejection — Inspectors. — Matter of Townshend, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 46 N. Y. St. Rep. 135.

6. Matter of Cecil, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 36 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 477. In this case it was also held that the corporation not being a moneyed corporation, the inspectors could not require a person voting by proxy to make affidavit that the stock was not hypothecated.

7. People v. Kip, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 382, note.

8. Agreement Not to Give Proxy. — Fisher v. Bush, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 641.

In Tomlin v. Farmers', etc., Bank, 52 Mo. App. 430, the question whether an agreement between certain shareholders, declared to be for the benefit of the company, not to sell their stock, or to grant proxies to persons outside those executing the agreement, was against public policy, was left undecided.

XI. PROXY GIVEN FOR CONSIDERATION — STATUTE. — A New York statute expressly prohibits the issuance of a proxy in consideration of any sum of money or other thing of value.¹ And a transfer, though absolute on its face, but designed simply to give to the transferee the right to vote on the stock for a designated period, is void; and the right to attack such a transaction is not confined to the owner of the stock, but belongs to any stockholder, each of whom is presumed to be interested in having only legal votes cast.²

XII. MATTERS OF EVIDENCE — 1. Evidence of Authority to Execute Proxy. — On an application to set aside an election of directors, it seems that proof of authority to execute a proxy to vote thereat not shown to the inspectors will not be received by the court to establish the allegation of an erroneous rejection of votes.³

2. Evidence that One Acted as Proxy. — Where the interests of several members were represented generally by another member, but the capacity in which he represented them and the extent of his authority were not shown, the circumstance that in a meeting of stockholders for the adoption of an amendment to its by-laws he appeared to have voted his individual stock only, was held not to indicate that he did, or intended to, express the assent of those other stockholders to the adoption of such amendment, even if he had the power to do so.⁴

3. Proxy as Evidence of Membership. — Where, in an action to enforce the liability of a stockholder, the evidence to show that the defendant was a stockholder at the time the debt was contracted consisted of a proxy given by him shortly afterwards to vote at an election, the time for holding which was less than thirty days from the time when the debt was contracted, and by the charter no stockholder could vote upon stock which he had not held for thirty days preceding the election, this evidence was held prima facie sufficient.⁵

4. Evidence of Contents of Lost Proxy. — Where the writings appointing proxies were, after being used, thrown aside as useless, it was held not to be necessary to show that search had been made for them before admitting secondary evidence of their contents.⁶

nym of "ordinary care." Matson v. Maupin, 75 Ala. 313.

Ordinary Care and Prudence. — In Fassett v. Roxbury, 55 Vt. 556, the court defined the phrase "ordinary care and prudence" as meaning that degree of prudence that a careful and prudent man would exercise under the circumstances. Cited in Cronk v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 3 S. Dak. 98. See generally the title NEGLIGENCE, vol. 21, p. 463 et seq.

Ordinary Care and Common Prudence Synonymous. — See Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Howard, 79 Ga. 53.

PUBLIC. (See also QUASI-PUBLIC, post, and see the title EXEMPTIONS (FROM TAXATION), vol. 12, p. 266.) — The word "public" is a convertible term, and when used in an Act of Assembly may refer to the whole body politic, that is to say, to all the inhabitants of the state, or to the inhabitants of a particular place only; it may be properly applied to the affairs of the state or of a county or of a community.³ Public signifies of or pertaining or belonging to the people,⁴ as opposed to private.⁵ The term is frequently joined to other terms to designate those things which have a relation to the public, as public officer, public house, public lands, public places, etc.; for instances of which usage see the various titles beginning with this word, and the phrases collected in the notes. When applied thus to property, the word sometimes describes the use to which the property is applied,⁶ at other

1. Prudential Affairs of Town. — A Massachusetts statute (now Pub. Stat. 1882, c. 27, § 15) empowers towns to make such orders and by-laws as are necessary for managing and ordering their "prudential affairs." In Willard v. Newburyport, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 231, the phrase "prudential affairs" was said by Shaw, C. J., to embrace "that large class of miscellaneous subjects affecting the accommodation and convenience of the inhabitants, which have been placed under the municipal jurisdiction of towns by statute or by usage." And in this case it was held that a town had authority to provide for the maintenance of a town clock.

But in State v. Boardman, 93 Me. 77, in construing a similar provision in the Maine statute, it was said: "The words 'prudential affairs' are certainly very indefinite and unsatisfactory, and it might be a very difficult matter in many cases to determine just what is or is not included within the meaning of the expression." See also Spaulding v. Lowell, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 71.

In State v. Whitesides, 30 S. Car. 585, it was said: "But to make a matter a public matter, it need not pertain to the whole nation or state. It is sufficient if it pertains to any separate or distinct portion thereof or community." See also State v. Brown, 10 Ark. 107; Pine City v. Munch, 42 Minn. 344; Lien v. Norman County, 80 Minn. 67.

Same — Municipality. — A deed of property to a municipal corporation contained a condition requiring a public hall to be erected upon the property within a certain time. In construing the word public, as thus used, the court said:

"The words public and 'public good' obviously relate to the town or town benefit, which, as embracing the good of the inhabitants of a large town, is not improperly designated as public or 'public good.'" Clarke v. Brookfield, 81 Mo. 512.

Same — Nuisance. — By the words "the public," used with respect to the collective body in whose behalf a prosecution to abate a common nuisance must be brought, are meant all those who are affected by the nuisance in the same way, or who, having occasion to come in contact with it, may be affected in the same way, though differing in the extent or degree to which they may be injured. Jones v. Chanute, 63 Kan. 243. See also the title NUISANCES, vol. 21, p. 679.

Same — Public Health. — In Thomas v. County Com'rs, 5 Ohio Dec. 503, the word public used in connection with the words "health, convenience, or welfare" was held to have reference to the people of the neighborhood.

But the Term May Refer to the Whole People. — Weeks v. Sparke, 1 M. & S. 690; Wyatt v. Larimer, etc., Irrigation Co., 1 Colo. App. 495; Huston Tp. v. Benzette Tp., 135 Pa. St. 398; Newcomb v. Smith, 2 Pinn. (Wis.) 154.

Public Act or Statute.—See the title STATUTES.

Public Address—Sermon.—In Com. v. Davis, 162 Mass. 510, affirmed Davis v. Massachusetts, 167 U. S. 43, it was held that a city ordinance providing that no person should, except by permission of the mayor, make any public address in or upon any of the public grounds of the city was constitutional, and that the words "public address" applied to a sermon delivered on the common.

Public Administration.—See PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION, post.

Public Affairs.—"Public affairs are matters relating to government." Montgomery v. Com., 91 Pa. St. 133.

Public Assemblies.—Within the meaning of a Texas statute regulating the "keeping and bearing" of deadly weapons, a justice's court which was in session and engaged in the trial of a cause was held to be a "public assembly." Summerlin v. State, 3 Tex. App. 444. And see the title CARRYING WEAPONS, vol. 5, p. 729.

Public Bar.—In Com. v. Rogers, 135 Mass. 536, it was held that a person licensed as a common victualer and to sell intoxicating liquors to be drunk on the premises, might be convicted of keeping a public bar if he sold and delivered, not in connection with food, intoxicating liquors indiscriminately to such persons as called for them, over a bar or counter, although there was no public display of liquors, and the bar was also used for luncheon purposes.

Public Bonds.—See infra, this note, Public Stocks and Securities.

Public Bridge.—See PUBLIC BRIDGE, post.

Public Buildings.—See the title PUBLIC BUILDING OR PROPERTY, post.

Public Buyer.—In Jones v. State, 69 Miss. 406, it was held that one whose business it was to buy cotton seed from the public was liable to a privilege tax imposed by an act on "a public buyer of cotton seed," although he bought as agent for a single oil mill. The court said: "He was a public as contradistinguished from a private buyer."

Public Charity.—See PUBLIC TRUST OR CHARITY, post.

Public Company—Life-insurance Company.—An unincorporated life-insurance company has been held to be a public company within the meaning of the English Apportionment Act of 1870, § 5. In re Griffith, 12 Ch. D. 655. See also PUBLIC CORPORATIONS, post.

Public Conveyances or Vehicles.—A city forbade public conveyances to stand on certain streets. It was held that an omnibus owned by the proprietor of a hotel in the city, and used to convey guests of the hotel to and from the different railroad stations and steamboat landings in the city, free of charge, was not a public conveyance within the meaning of the ordinance. Oswego v. Collins, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 171. See also New York v. Hexamer, 59 N. Y. App. Div. 4.

A city ordinance imposed a license tax upon all public vehicles using the streets of the city for trade, traffic, or other purposes. It was held under this ordinance that the carts of a person engaged in the business of sprinkling the streets of the city with water for compensation paid by the owners of property fronting on the streets were public vehicles. St. Louis v. Woodruff, 71 Mo. 92.

Public Exhibition.—See PUBLIC AMUSEMENT, EXHIBITION, ETC., post.

Public Franchises. (See also FRANCHISES, vol. 14, p. 4, and the title QUO WARRANTO, post.)—A statute provided that an information in the nature of a quo warranto might be instituted when any person unlawfully exercised "any public office or franchise." It was held that the words "public franchise" included the exercise by a corporation of a right to use the city's streets for gas pipes for lighting purposes. Winston v. Seattle Gas, etc., Co., (Wash. 1902) 68 Pac. Rep. 946.

Public Funds and Money.—See PUBLIC FUNDS AND MONEY, post.

Public Grants.—See PUBLIC GRANT, post.

Public Highways.—See the title HIGHWAYS, vol. 15, p. 343.

Public Hospital. (See also the title HOSPITALS AND ASYLUMS, vol. 15, p. 757.)—In Struthers v. Sudbury, 27 Ont. App. 217, it was held that

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION — ADMINISTRATOR. (See also the title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. 11, p. 806.) — Public administration is a hospital carried on by and for the benefit of two medical practitioners, and used chiefly by patients paying fees, though to some extent by indigent patients, and in receipt of a government grant under the Charity Aid Act, was a public hospital.

Public Letting. — In Eppes v. Mississippi, etc., R. Co., 35 Ala. 61, it was said: "While we concede that a letting of railroad contracts by oral outcry, and to the lowest bidder, pursuant to public proclamation, would be a public letting, yet we do not think that the only mode in which a letting may be public."

Public Libraries. — See the title EXEMPTIONS (FROM TAXATION), vol. 12, p. 332.

Public Markets. — See the title MARKETS, vol. 19, p. 1139.

Public Messenger. — In Pfister v. Central Pac. R. Co., 70 Cal. 169, it was held that a county treasurer was not a public messenger within the meaning of a statute imposing upon a railroad company the duty of transporting public messengers without compensation.

Public Minister. — See PUBLIC MINISTERS, post.

Public Money. — See PUBLIC FUNDS AND MONEY, post.

Public Notice. (See also the title NOTICE, vol. 21, p. 580.) — Fence commissioners were by law required to give due public notice before acting on petition. Upon the meaning of the term "public notice," as thus used, the court, in Matter of Lishman, 7 Hawaii 267, said: "Public notice must mean a notice to the public, and is not made by one or several notices to one or several individuals. The statute requires public notice to be given, without prescribing the method."

Public Printing. — In Post Office Printing, 7 Op. Atty.-Gen. 680, it was held that the postmaster-general might lawfully contract with printers out of the city of Washington to execute such printing for the post-office department as might be required for use out of Washington.

Public Property — Gas. — In Toledo v. Yeager,

6 Ohio Cir. Dec. 273, 9 Ohio Cir. Ct. 279, it was held that a gas well, pipes, lines, machinery, and fixtures, owned and used by a city for supplying the city and its inhabitants with natural gas, were public property.

Same — Church Property. — In Smith v. State, 63 Ga. 168, it was held that when benches and books in a church edifice are described as the public property of the church, the meaning is that they are its common property, or for common use by the members or by the congregation.

Public Stocks and Securities. — In Hale v. Hampshire County, 137 Mass. 111, it was held that bonds issued by a railroad company which was managed by its stockholders for the purpose of private gain, were not public stocks and securities. See also Oahu R. Co. v. Brown, 8 Hawaii 165.

In Hall v. Middlesex County, 10 Allen (Mass.) 100, it was held that bonds issued under special legislative authority by a state or city, for aiding in the construction of a railroad, were public stocks. See also the titles MUNICIPAL SECURITIES, vol. 21, p. 13; MUNICIPAL AID, vol. 20, p. 1082.

Public Taxes. — In Morgan v. Cree, 46 Vt. 773, 14 Am. Rep. 640, it was held that where a township was granted to a college by a charter providing that the lands of the township should be exempt from public taxes, it was not exempt from taxation for municipal purposes. Public Warehouse. (See also the titles ELEVATORS, vol. 10, p. 944; WAREHOUSE AND WAREHOUSEMEN.) — A statute provided that the term "public warehouse" should embrace all warehouses in which grain in bulk was stored and in which the grain of different owners was mixed together, or in which grain was stored in such a manner that the identity of the different lots could not be accurately preserved. It was held that a warehouse in which bins were leased for storing grain and keeping it separated from that of others, and which issued no warehouse receipts, was not a public warehouse. State v. Smith, 114 Mo. 180. See also State v. Brass, 2 N. Dak. 495.

Public or Private Waters. (See also the title NAVIGABLE WATERS, vol. 21, p. 424.) — In Cobb v. Davenport, 32 N. J. L. 378, it was said: "The test by which to determine whether waters are public or private is the ebb and flow of the tide. Waters in which the tide ebbs and flows, so far only as the sea flows and reflows, are public waters; and those in which there is no ebb and flow of the tide are private waters."

Public Ways. — See PUBLIC WAYS, post.

Public Welfare. — The term "public welfare" includes both public health and convenience. Sessions v. Crunkilton, 20 Ohio St. 356.

Public Wharf. (See also the title WHARVES AND WHARFINGERS.) — In Horn v. People, 26 Mich. 224, it was said: "There is no instance in which the term 'public wharf' has been used in our legislation to indicate anything analogous to a dedication to any public use, like that of highways. Such a public right is unknown to the common law. Wharfage involves exclusive use, for longer or shorter periods, by each vessel, depending on the nature of its business and the extent of its cargo. All that is meant in the charter by a public wharf is a wharf belonging to the city, and to be used like any other wharf property. The term is applied as well to wharves on city property away from streets as to wharves at the end of streets."

Public Whore. — In Zimmerman v. McMakin, 22 S. Car. 372, it was held that there was no substantial difference between the words "public whore," as charged in the complaint, and "whoreish bitch," the words proved at the trial.

2. Public Amusement, Etc. — In Harris v. Com., 81 Va. 240, 59 Am. Rep. 666, it was held that a skating rink was not a public performance or exhibition within a statute requiring a license to be taken out for public performances or exhibitions.

A statute required a license for "theatrical exhibitions, public shows, public amusements, and exhibitions." It was held that a dance hall to which the public was admitted upon the payment of a small fee was a public amusement within the meaning of this statute. Com. v. Quinn, 164 Mass. 11. See AMUSEMENT, vol. 2, p. 318.

I. DEFINITION. — In its literal sense publication is the act of bringing a matter to public notice.¹ This may be done either by words spoken, as, for instance, the declaration of a testator, in the presence of witnesses, that the instrument is his last will and testament;² but more usually a publication is the putting forth of some printed or written matter, so as to bring it to the notice either of the public generally, as in the case of newspaper advertisements and the like,³ or of one or more particular individuals, e. g., the publication of a libel,⁴ or of obscene matter.⁵

II. EFFECT OF PUBLICATION AS NOTICE. — In the absence of a statute on the subject, no person can be charged with notice of an advertisement or other matter printed in a newspaper of the vicinity, even though he is a subscriber thereto, unless it is proved that he actually saw or read such matter.¹ And it has been said that the fact of publication in a newspaper is not even a circumstance from which the jury may infer notice of the matter so published.² By modern legislation, however, the publication of notices operates to charge with knowledge of the contents thereof the person to whom the notices are addressed or whose rights are to be affected by the proceedings in which the notices are given. Thus, provision is generally made for the service of summons by publication in certain cases where personal service cannot be had,³ and publication of notice of various other judicial proceedings and official acts is required either as a prerequisite to the validity of such proceedings or acts, or as concluding the persons affected from denying their validity.⁴

III. MODE OF PUBLICATION — 1. In Newspapers. — Where publication in a newspaper is required, the statute or order of court generally either designates a particular paper,⁵ or requires the publication to be made in one which answers a description more or less particular, as, for instance, a "daily newspaper,"⁶ a "public newspaper,"⁷ or merely a "newspaper."⁸

Language of Publication. — In the absence of a direction to the contrary, the publication of a notice must be in the English language and in a newspaper printed in that language.⁹

2. By Posting. — The statutes sometimes provide for the giving of notices by posting them at some designated¹⁰ or "public" place or places,¹¹

1. Subscriber to Newspaper Not Ipso Facto Chargeable with Notice of Its Contents. — Watkins v. Peck, 13 N. H. 360, 40 Am. Dec. 156; Beltzhoover v. Blackstock, 3 Watts (Pa.) 20, 27 Am. Dec. 330; Keckely v. Road Com'rs, 4 McCord L. (S. Car.) 463.

In King v. Paterson, etc., R. Co., 29 N. J. L. 82, there is a dictum by Haines, J., that an advertisement in a newspaper, circulating in the neighborhood where a stockholder had his place of business, is presumptive evidence of notice to him that the company's dividend is made payable at a designated banking house; but that the presumption may be overcome by positive proof that such notice did not come to his knowledge. But this case actually decides only that the stockholder was not shown to have read or seen the notice.

The publicity of an advertisement is no reason for supposing it known to those who are not proved to have read the paper containing it. Yocum v. Morice, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 106, 17 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 324.

Newspaper Circulating in Vicinity. — Clark v. Ricker, 14 N. H. 44.

Proof that a Person Usually Read a Certain Newspaper and that a statement appeared in that newspaper is not constructive notice of such statement. Lincoln v. Wright, 23 Pa. St. 76, 62 Am. Dec. 316.

Official Newspapers. — Thus, state and municipal legislative bodies sometimes designate a particular newspaper as the official paper for the publication of the acts and proceedings of such bodies. See Albany County v. Chaplin, 5 Wyo. 74.

6. Publication in Daily Newspaper. — Richardson v. Tobin, 45 Cal. 30; Guest v. Brooklyn, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 98.

8. A "Newspaper" within the meaning of a statute requiring the publication of legal notices is one which gives items of current news though it is devoted chiefly to some special interest, such as the dissemination of legal intelligence. Kerr v. Hitt, 75 Ill. 51; Railton v. Lauder, 26 Ill. App. 655, affirmed 126 Ill. 219; Lynch v. Durfee, 101 Mich. 171, 45 Am. St. Rep. 404. See also NEWSPAPERS, vol. 21, p. 533.

9. Language of Publication. — Chicago v. McCoy, 136 Ill. 352; Graham v. King, 50 Mo. 22, 11 Am. Rep. 401; Tyler v. Bowen, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 225; Road in Upper Hanover, 44 Pa. St. 277; Kratz's Appeal, 2 Pittsb. (Pa.) 452, 21 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 4. But see Richardson v. Tobin, 45 Cal. 30, holding that it is sufficient to publish the notice in a German paper, if such notice is printed therein in the English language.

10. Posting Notices at Specified Place — Court-house Door. — Drew v. Gant, 1 Oregon 197; Falkner v. Guild, 10 Wis. 563.

Posting on Door of Parish Church. — Reg. v. Meath, (1897) 2 Ir. 21.

11. Posting at Public Place. — Tidd v. Smith, 3 N. H. 178 (holding that a shoemaker's shop is not a "public place"); Scammon v. Scammon, 28 N. H. 419 (holding a church to be, prima facie, a "public place"); Hoitt v. Burnham, 61 N. H. 620 (holding an inn and post office to be, prima facie, public places).

Any place where the inhabitants of a town and others most frequently meet or have occa-

or at a "conspicuous" public place.¹

Proof of Posting. — Proof that a notice was posted as required by law may be made by the return of the officer, in case it was required to be done by an officer,² or by affidavit,³ or by the testimony of any competent witness.⁴

IX. PROOF OF PUBLICATION. — The statutes which authorize or require the publication in a newspaper of a notice or other matter sometimes provide for the mode of proving the fact of publication. The mode usually prescribed is by producing the affidavit or certificate of a person sustaining a certain relation to the newspaper in which the matter was required to be published, showing that the requirements of the statute have been fully complied with in the premises,⁵ or by the return of the officer in a case where an officer is required to give notice in a newspaper.⁶

If the Newspaper Is Not Specifically Designated by the statute or by any order of publication, that is, if the publication is required to be made in a newspaper of a certain character or description, e. g., that it circulates in the vicinity, the proof must show that it is of such character or description.⁷

If the Proof Cannot Be Made as Required by the Statute, then the fact of publication must be proved like other facts, by any competent evidence that may be available.⁸

V. PERIOD OF PUBLICATION. — The statutes relating to the publication of notices generally provide that the publication shall be for a specified time,⁹ and where the requirement is that a notice shall be published for a certain period before a given time, and there are several insertions of the notice, it has been held that such period will be computed from the time of the first insertion.¹⁰

PUBLIC BRIDGE. — A "public bridge" is a structure which affords a safe, convenient, and complete passageway over some obstacle that without it would prevent, hinder, or delay the free transit of those who desire to pass along a public highway.¹¹

2. Proof of Posting — Return of Officer. — Gibney v. Crawford, 51 Ark. 34.

3. Proof by Affidavit. — The Iowa statute provides that the posting of any notice may be proved by affidavit of a competent witness, but it is held that this does not exclude proof of service by other competent evidence. Shawhan v. Loffer, 24 Iowa 217. See also Opening of Albany St., (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 273.

4. Proof by Testimony of Witness. — Alvord v. Collin, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 418.

5. Affidavit of Publisher. — Cissell v. Pulaski County, 10 Fed. Rep. 891; Gibney v. Crawford, 51 Ark. 34; Ullman v. Lion, 8 Minn. 381, 83 Am. Dec. 783; Soule v. Chase, 39 N. Y. 342.

Proof by Certificate of Publisher. — McChesney v. People, 145 Ill. 614; Smith v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 67 Ill. 191.

Relation to Newspaper of Person Making Affidavit or Certificate. — Pentzel v. Squire, 161 Ill. 346, 52 Am. St. Rep. 373; Andrews v. Ohio, etc., R. Co., 14 Ind. 169; Ullman v. Lion, 8 Minn. 381, 83 Am. Dec. 783.

7. Proof of Character of Newspaper. — Gibney v. Crawford, 51 Ark. 34.

8. Inability to Make Statutory Proof. — Thus, after the publisher of a newspaper has ceased to be such, his certificate of the publication of notice required by law to be published is inadmissible as evidence of the publication, but in such case he can only verify the fact by his testimony as a witness. Smith v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 67 Ill. 191.

I. DEFINITION. — By the term “public buildings or property” is meant buildings or property in which the property together with the possession and use is in the public.¹

II. DIVERSION FROM PUBLIC USE. — It has been held in a number of cases that the public authorities have no power to divert public buildings or property from the public to a private use, or to lease a public building or a part thereof.² But in some cases it has been held that where a building has been

1. Definition. — State v. Troth, 34 N. J. L. 377.

Confined to Municipal Buildings to Exclusion of County Buildings. — Land was platted into blocks and lots by the owner, one block not being platted into lots, but being reserved and dedicated for public buildings. It was held that this dedication did not authorize the erection on the block of a county court house. McIntyre v. El Paso County, 15 Colo. App. 78.

Academy. — Public buildings of a county are such as are ordinarily used in, or are indispensable to, the conduct of the business of the county. Kittaning Academy v. Brown, 41 Pa. St. 270, in which case it was held that an academy was not a public building under an act setting apart certain land for the public buildings of the county.

Boarding School — Exemption. — It has been held that where there is an exemption of public property, the word “public” refers to ownership by the government or some municipal subdivision, and does not apply to a boarding school. St. Edwards College v. Morris, 82 Tex. 1. But see the title EXEMPTIONS (FROM TAXATION), vol. 12, p. 375.

Church. — In Collum v. State, 109 Ga. 531, it was held that a church was not a public building within the meaning of a statute making it a misdemeanor to destroy, injure, or deface any public building.

But in Reg. v. Carruthers, 4 B. & S. 804, 116 E. C. L. 804, a church was treated as being within a statute providing that the walls of public buildings should be constructed “in such manner as may be approved by the district surveyor.”

Town Hall. — A town hall has been held to be a public building. Clarke v. Brookfield, 81 Mo. 512.

Waterworks. — In a statute authorizing a city to raise funds for the erection of public buildings, the term “public buildings” has been held not to include waterworks. State v. Columbia, 111 Mo. 365.

Kempton*, 13 Mass. 272; Kingman v. Brockton, 153 Mass. 255; Crump v. Colfax County, 52 Miss. 107.

Jail. — In Thompson v. Probert, 2 Bush (Ky.) 144, it was held that a contract by which a jailer undertook for a reward to appropriate the jail or rooms in the jail to the accommodation of private persons, for uses not prescribed or plainly implied by law, was against public policy.

Slaves. — In Miller v. Porter, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 282, it was held that it was against public policy to permit a jailer to place slaves in the public jail at the instance of their owners, and that no contract to pay was implied on the erected for public purposes, the proper authorities may allow it to be used incidentally for other purposes, either gratuitously or for compensation.¹ And of course a public building may be used for private purposes where there is express legislative authority.²

PUBLIC CORPORATIONS. (See also the titles BOROUGHs, vol. 4, p. 721; COUNTIES, vol. 7, p. 898; EMINENT DOMAIN, vol. 10, p. 1043; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, vol. 20, p. 1123; TOWNS AND TOWNSHIPS.)—A public corporation is one which is created for political purposes, with political powers to be exercised for purposes connected with the public good in the administration of civil government; an instrument of government subject to the control of the legislature, such as towns, cities, counties, etc.³ “Strictly speaking, public corporations are such only as are founded by the government for public purposes, where the whole interests belong also to the government. If, therefore, the foundation be private, though under the charter of the government, the corporation is private, however extensive the uses may be to which it is devoted, either by the bounty of the founder or the nature and objects of the institution.”⁴ In a broader sense a public corporation has been defined as one which cannot carry out the purposes of its organization without chartered rights from the commonwealth.⁵

Sheriff's Residence.—In Franklin County v. Bunting, 111 Ind. 143, it was held that a board of commissioners of a county had authority to build a jail and a sheriff's residence in connection therewith.

School.—In Spencer v. Joint School Dist. No. 6, 15 Kan. 259, 22 Am. Rep. 268, it was held that the use of a public-school building for other than school purposes was unlawful and might be enjoined at the suit of any one injured thereby. See also the title SCHOOLS.

PUBLIC GROUND. (See also the title DEDICATION, vol. 9, p. 20.)—“Public ground, in the ordinary sense, is ground in which the general public has a common use; and it would not accord with the common understanding of the language used to say that land devoted to the use of a local religious society, or hospital, or academy, created for church, hospital, or academic purposes, is public ground, even if the use be considered in a sense public.”⁵ held that the term public debt could not be confined to what was evidenced by one form of indebtedness or liability, but embraced warrants as well as bonds.

Under a constitutional provision that a county might levy a tax to pay the public indebtedness, it was held that a judgment entered upon a claim or evidence of indebtedness incurred in excess of the ordinary revenue of the county, without a vote of the people, or in excess of the constitutional limitation upon the indebtedness which a county might incur, was not a public debt. Grand Island, etc., R. Co. v. Baker, 6 Wyo. 369.

1. Public Documents. — By Act Cong. June 23, 1874, c. 476, public documents were defined to be all publications printed by order of Congress or either house thereof. See McCall v. U. S., 1 Dak. 314.

2. “Public Domain” in Sense of “Unappropriated Public Domain.” — Day Land, etc., Co. v. State, 68 Tex. 547. And see the title PUBLIC LANDS, post.

3. Public Money. — People v. Murray, 4 N. Y. App. Div. 191; Seneca County v. Allen, 99 N. Y. 532.

In People v. New York Soc., etc., 162 N. Y. 431, the court defined a charitable institution as “one that in some form or to some extent receives public money for the support and maintenance of indigent persons. By public money is meant money raised by taxation, not only in the state at large, but in any city, county, or town.”

Same — United States. — In the statutes of the United States, the term public money ordinarily means the money of the federal government received from the public revenues, or intrusted to its fiscal officers, wherever it may be. “It does not include the money of states, counties, cities, and towns, although, with reference to those governments and municipalities, such funds in other connections would be deemed public money. Nor does it include money in the hands of the marshals, clerks, and other officers of courts, held by them under authority of law to await the judgment of the court in relation to the ownership thereof. Such money constitutes trust funds held for individual litigants, and not for the public as represented by the government.” Branch’s Case, 12 Ct. Cl. 290.

The money appropriated to the payment of the Cherokee Indians upon their removal and the cession of their lands was properly public money, although it was money stipulated by treaty to be paid to them upon such cession and removal. Minis v. U. S., 15 Pet. (U. S.) 448.

Public Funds. — See FUND — FUNDS, vol. 14, p. 565.

5. Public Grounds. — Patrick v. Young Men’s Christian Assoc., 120 Mich. 191. This case was upon the construction of a statute providing that the recording of a plat of a town describing the public grounds should vest the fee in the public.

Streets and Other Public Grounds. — An act was entitled: “An act relating to actions against cities, villages, or boroughs, for damages to persons injured on streets and other public grounds.” It was held that the words public grounds were not to be construed as ejusdem generis with the word “streets.” Winters v. Duluth, 82 Minn. 130.

Same — Sidewalks. — A charter of a city provided that the city should be liable to any one for loss or injury to person or property growing out of any casualty or accident happening to any such person or property on account of any street or public ground. It was held that public ground, in this sense, included sidewalks. Giffen v. Lewiston, (Idaho 1898) 55 Pac. Rep. 545; McLean v. Lewiston, (Idaho 1902) 69 Pac. Rep. 478.

they were designated as public ground, it was held that they should be taken for a public square for the use of the town. The court, per Lane, C. J., said: "The words expressed in the act of dedication were public ground; a phrase which, in reference to a lot in a town, of shape, dimensions, and position suitable for this purpose, naturally, though not necessarily, means a public square." Lebanon v. Warren County, 9 Ohio 80, 33 Am. Dec. 422.

Opera House.—In Galloway v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1894) 26 S. W. Rep. 67, it was held that an opera house in which there had been but two performances in six months, and which was closed between performances, was not a public house, as the term was used in a statute against gaming.

Barber Shop.—A barber shop has been held to be a public house within a statute against gaming. Moore v. State, 30 Ala. 550.

Public House and Public Place Distinguished.—See Windham v. State, 26 Ala. 60.

Store.—A country storehouse has been held to be a public house within the prohibition of a statute against gaming. Huffman v. State, 30 Ala. 532.

Schoolhouse.—A schoolhouse has been held to be a public house within a gaming statute. Cole v. State, 28 Tex. App. 536.

Tavern, Hotel, and Public House used Synonymously.—See HOTEL, vol. 15, p. 766.

2. Public Improvements.—A statute provided that convicts in the penitentiary might be employed upon public improvements. It was held that public improvements included all public works belonging to or prosecuted by a state, a county, or a city. Ward v. Little Rock, 41 Ark. 529. See also Brace v. Gloversville, 39 N. Y. App. Div. 29.

Same—Municipal Corporations.—In Low v. Marysville, 5 Cal. 215, it was said: "The words public improvements, when applied to a municipal government, must be taken in a limited sense, as applying to those improvements which are the proper subject of police and municipal regulation, such as gas, water, almshouses, hospitals, etc., and cannot be extended to subjects foreign to the object of the incorporation, and beyond its territorial limits."

3. Public Landing Equivalent to Public Levee.—Napa v. Howland, 87 Cal. 84.

4. Public Ministers.—In re Baiz, 135 U. S. 419.

5. Public Newspapers.—In Maass v. Hess, 140 Ill. 576, it was held that the court could not show, as matter of law, that a weekly publication devoted to the interest of business, corporations, commerce, and finance was not a public newspaper.

6. Public Offense.—Within the meaning of a Minnesota statute authorizing a peace officer to arrest without a warrant for a "public offense committed or attempted in his presence," the term public offense was held, in State v. Cantieny, 34 Minn. 8, to include the violation of a city ordinance. The court, per Dickinson, J., said: "The word 'public' was not intended to express the idea of a distinction between offenses made such by common law or by general statute, and those defined by a law having but a limited territorial operation. * * * It [the term public offense] includes all such violations of municipal ordinances as are punishable by fine or imprisonment." Compare State v. Lee, 29 Minn. 451. And see Dyer v. Placer County, 90 Cal. 276, for the statutory definition of this term in California. See also People v. Holmes, 118 Cal. 450.

I. DEFINITIONS. — In the most general and comprehensive sense, a public office is an agency for the state, and a person whose duty it is to perform this agency is a public officer.¹ Stated more definitely, a public office is a charge or trust conferred by public authority for a public purpose,² the duties of which involve in their performance the exercise of some portion of the sovereign power, whether great or small.³ A public officer is an individual who has been appointed or elected in the manner prescribed by law, who has a designation or title given to him by law, and who exercises the functions concerning the public assigned to him by law.⁴

Criteria. — There are numerous criteria which are not in themselves conclusive, yet which aid in determining whether a person is an officer and whether his employment is an office. Thus, a public officer is usually required to take an oath,¹ and frequently has to give a bond.² Usually an officer is entitled to a salary or fees, but this is not necessary.³ The term "office" also embraces the ideas of tenure⁴ and duration or continuance.⁵ Generally speaking, one of the requisites of an office is that it must be created by a constitutional provision, or it must be authorized by some statute.⁶ Official or unofficial character is to be determined not by the presence or absence of an official designation, but by the nature of the functions to be performed.⁷ Designation by the law as an officer is, however, of some significance.⁸

Distinction Between Office and Employment. — While an office is a public charge or employment, not every employment is an office. It is difficult, however, to distinguish between employments which are and those which are not public offices. The distinction has been thus stated: Where an employment or a duty is a continuing one, defined by rules prescribed by law and not by contract, such a charge or employment is an office. A duty or employment arising out of a contract and dependent for its duration and extent upon the terms of such contract is not an office.¹ And again, in distinguishing between these terms, it has been said that an office differs from an employment in that the former implies a delegation of a portion of the sovereign power to, and the possession of it by, the person filling the office.²

In Applying These General Principles the courts have arrived at conclusions which are not always harmonious, but such differences are probably due in large part to the varying constitutional and statutory provisions under which many of the cases were decided.³

b. HONORARY OFFICES. — An honorary office is one to which are attached no fees, perquisites, profits, or salary.¹

4. With Reference to Title. — Classified according to the legality and character of their title, officers are either de jure officers, de facto officers, or usurpers.

a. OFFICERS DE JURE. — An officer de jure is one who is clothed with the full legal right and title to the office; in other words, one who has been legally elected or appointed to an office, and who has qualified himself to exercise the duties thereof according to the mode prescribed by law.²

b. OFFICERS DE FACTO. — Public officers de facto have been defined and fully discussed elsewhere in this work.³

c. USURPERS. — A usurper is one who assumes the right of government by force, contrary to and in violation of the constitution of the country;⁴ or, as the term is most generally used, a usurper is one who undertakes to act as an officer without any color of right.⁵ The acts of a usurper are utterly void,⁶ both as to the public and as to individuals,⁷ unless he continues to act for so long a time or under such circumstances as to afford a presumption of his right to act, and then his acts are valid as to the public and third persons, but he has no defense in a direct proceeding against himself.⁸

5. With Reference to Nature of Public Body. — Officers, with regard to the public body for which they act, are officers of the general government,⁹ state officers, county officers, and municipal officers.

a. STATE OFFICERS. — In a popular sense a state officer is one whose jurisdiction is coextensive with the state.¹⁰ In a more enlarged sense a state officer is one who receives his authority under the laws of the state and performs some of the governmental functions of the state.¹¹

b. COUNTY OFFICERS. — An officer of the county is one by whom the county performs its usual political functions, its functions of government.¹

c. MUNICIPAL OFFICERS. — A municipal officer is an officer of a borough, city, incorporated town or village, or the like.²

III. CREATION OF OFFICE. — Constitutions generally provide for the necessary public offices,³ and the legislative branch of the government may create offices or agencies not specifically provided for by the constitution, the limitation being that there must not be any invasion of the plan of the fundamental law or anything inconsistent with its provisions and their unobstructed operation.⁴

IV. NATURE AND INCIDENTS OF PUBLIC OFFICES — LEGISLATIVE CONTROL —

1. In England. — At common law offices were incorporeal hereditaments, and one might have an estate in them, either to him and his heirs, or for life, or for a term of years, or during pleasure only. Offices of public trust, especially if they concerned the administration of justice, could not be granted for a term of years, nor could any judicial office be granted in reversion.⁵ The nature of offices of modern origin depends upon the statutes creating them, and in the absence of an express provision to that effect no life estate or irrevocable tenure is conferred.⁶

2. In United States. — It is well settled in the United States that an office is not the property of the officeholder, but is a public trust or agency; that it is not held by contract or grant; that the officer has no vested right therein; and that, subject to constitutional restrictions, the office may be vacated or abolished, the duties thereof changed, and the term and compensation increased or diminished.⁷ The fact that a constitution may forbid the legislature to abolish a public office or diminish the salary thereof during the term of the incumbent does not change the character of the office, nor make it property. True, the restrictions limit the power of the legislature to deal with the office, but even such restrictions may be removed by constitutional amendment.¹

In North Carolina, however, it has been expressly decided in a number of carefully considered cases that a public officer has, by contract between the state and himself, a vested right of property in his office of which he can be deprived only in accordance with the law of the land, and that while the legislature may abolish the office, it cannot continue the office and transfer its duties and emoluments to another against the will of the vested incumbent.¹

V. ELIGIBILITY — 1. In General. — The constitutions and statutes of most of the states contain an enumeration, more or less full, of the qualifications and disqualifications for public office. Although they possess a general similarity, these provisions are too diverse to permit of a summary at once comprehensive and exact, and hence should be consulted for details.

2. Power of Legislature to Define. — Within constitutional limitations the legislature may define qualifications of officeholders² or impose qualifications in addition to those enumerated in the constitution;³ but it cannot change or add to those imposed by the constitution unless such power is conferred by that instrument.⁴ And where the constitution declares that certain persons are eligible to "any office within the gift of the people," those offices filled by the legislature as well as those filled by popular vote are included.⁵

One May Be Elected to an Office to which he may not be appointed on account of an express prohibition against appointment.⁶ State authorities cannot prescribe qualifications for federal offices.⁷ Qualifications necessary to an election are likewise necessary, as a general rule, to an appointment to office.⁸

3. Meaning of "Eligible." — The term "eligible" has already been defined.⁹

4. As of What Time. — Whether the necessary qualifications must exist at the time of the election or at the time of entering upon the duties of the office may depend upon the wording of the statute, which may refer to the one or the other. This question has already been discussed.¹⁰

5. Special Qualifications — a. CITIZENSHIP. — It is quite provided by the state constitutions that no one is eligible to certain offices unless he has been a citizen of the United States or of the state for a specified time.¹¹ This rule has been applied to the offices of governor,¹ sheriff,² chief of police,³ and county treasurer.⁴ One who has declared his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States and has qualified as an elector is eligible to hold office,⁵ and in Wisconsin even without such declaration he may be elected to office provided his disability is removed before the beginning of his term;⁶ but it is otherwise where only electors are eligible to office, and the declaration of intention to become a citizen was not made until after election.⁷ Where a "voter" is declared to be eligible he need not be a citizen of the United States if he is a qualified voter under the state laws.⁸ Alienage at the time of election may be removed before the date of installation.⁹

b. RESIDENCE. — A very common qualification in an officeholder is that of residence for a specified period prior to his election or installation.¹⁰ In this connection the words "residence" and "domicil" are usually regarded as synonymous, the former being more often used by the legislature, the latter by the courts.¹¹ But it has been held that "inhabitant" and "citizen" are not synonymous, and that where the former word alone is used, the candidate need not necessarily have been a citizen for the designated period.¹² Usually the specified period is to be measured from the date of election, and not from that of installation.¹³ The requirement of residence relates merely to qualification for election, and does not prescribe the place of abode after election.¹⁴ Where one resides and has his business in a place other than that in which he claims a domicil and a vote, it is a question for the jury whether he is eligible to appointment in the one place or the other.¹⁵ The residence abroad of a consul does not of itself change his domicil.¹⁶ One may be qualified for office by a residence too short to entitle him to vote.¹⁷ Residence within a city is not essential save for city officers,¹⁸ and removal from or non-residence in a borough or city will disqualify an officer from longer holding his office only when the law so provides.¹⁹ The acts of a duly appointed officer are valid although he was not qualified by residence.²⁰

c. AGE. — Statutory provision is usually made that candidates for the more important offices must have reached a certain age, and where an officer elect has not reached the requisite age, his office may be declared to be vacant.²¹ Such a provision placing the minimum age limit above twenty-one years does not violate a provision of the constitution making electors eligible to any office.¹ An army officer retired for age may be eligible to appointment to a state or municipal office.² Discharged veterans are sometimes allowed to hold office as long as physically qualified, regardless of age.³ Statutory provisions disqualifying as judges those who have attained the age of seventy years do not apply to justices of the peace,⁴ surrogates,⁵ or county commissioners.⁶ It has been held that an infant, though not eligible to any office of importance, may be capable of acting as a sheriff's special deputy, as a notary public, or as clerk of a company in the militia, or even of holding the office of deputy county clerk, and as such qualified to administer an oath. But an infant cannot hold any office in the discharge of whose duties judgment, discretion, and experience are necessary. Hence, he cannot act as justice of the peace.⁷

d. SEX. — Where only qualified voters are eligible to office, women are, of course, excluded in any state that has not extended to them the right of suffrage.⁸ But where eligibility depends upon citizenship only, women are eligible. This test admits them to some offices, but excludes them from others, their eligibility in the particular case depending upon the wording and construction of the statutes and constitution.⁹ Thus, it has been held that a woman may be county clerk or deputy county clerk,¹⁰ or county superintendent,¹¹ or a master in chancery,¹² or a member of a school committee;¹³ but not a jailer,¹⁴ nor a school director,¹⁵ nor county superintendent of common schools,¹⁶ nor director of a workhouse,¹⁷ nor a justice of the peace.¹⁸ She may be confirmed by a retroactive statute in any office to which she was ineligible when chosen.¹⁹ The words "he" or "his" in the statute will include women as well as men, and hence furnish no argument in favor of excluding women from office.²⁰ The eligibility of women to the office of attorney at law is discussed elsewhere.²¹

while such a qualification for voting is not unknown in the United States,¹ it is extremely rare as a qualification for holding office. In a few jurisdictions it is required that members of municipal councils and similar bodies shall be freeholders,² or shall have paid their taxes.³

f. RIGHT TO VOTE. — It is provided in several state constitutions that none but qualified voters shall be elected or appointed to office.⁴ But an officeholder who, as an elector, was eligible at the time of his election does not become ineligible because subsequently his name is stricken from the list of registered voters.⁵

6. Disqualifications — a. IN GENERAL. — Under the Federal Constitution and the constitutions of many states certain disqualifications to public office are enumerated.⁶

b. HOLDING INCOMPATIBLE OFFICES — (1) In General. — Probably the most frequent ground of ineligibility to office is the holding of another office by the candidate. Such ground rests not upon the physical impossibility of performing the duties of both offices,⁷ but upon express constitutional or statutory provisions. Sometimes the incompatible offices are enumerated, but more often there is found a general prohibition against holding two offices, with possibly the exception of certain specified offices not deemed incompatible.⁸ The holder of a judicial office may be elected to another office not judicial, provided the term of the latter does not begin until after the former ends;⁹ and it seems that two offices wholly or chiefly ministerial are not incompatible unless made so by express legislation.¹⁰ Two offices are incompatible where the one includes the power of removal over the other, as those of governor and mayor.¹¹

(2) Lucrative Office. — Sometimes the prohibition is aimed against those who already hold a "lucrative" office under some other power, and extends only to the holding of "a civil office of profit." Usually postmasters of small offices are excepted.¹²

Interpreting the Word "Lucrative" as descriptive of an office, it has been held that the following are lucrative offices: inspector of customs,¹³ postmaster¹⁴ or deputy postmaster,¹⁵ school trustee,¹⁶ township collector,¹⁷ deputy treasurer,¹⁸ trustee of a deaf and dumb institute,¹⁹ and a position upon the retired list of the United States army;²⁰ but it has been held that the office of president of the board of trustees of a benevolent institution is not a lucrative office.²¹

In California, however, it has been held that the lucrative office referred to by the constitution was a federal office only.¹

One Who Is an Officer de Facto Only is not disqualified to hold a civil office of profit.⁴

(4) Incompatible State Offices. — In construing the various statutes on the subject it has been held that the following state offices are incompatible: mayor and governor;⁵ mayor of a city and any other office not judicial;⁶ mayor and prison director;⁷ major-general and colonel of a company attached to a brigade of the division commanded by the major-general;⁸ state senator and paymaster in the army;⁹ member of Congress and Supreme Court judge;¹⁰ judge and member of the legislature;¹¹ judge of the Supreme Court and commissioner of appraisal;¹² chancery clerk and member of the legislature;¹³ town clerk and alderman;¹⁴ jurat and town clerk;¹⁵ member of the board of health and jury commissioner;¹⁶ jury commissioner and police commissioner;¹⁷ coroner and county commissioner or justice of the peace;¹⁸ justice of the peace and township trustee;¹⁹ justice of the peace and clerk of the court;²⁰ notary public and county clerk or receiver of public money;²¹ highway commissioner and sheriff;²² deputy sheriff and tax collector;²³ attorney-general and prosecutor of the pleas;²⁴ prosecuting attorney and representative in Congress;²⁵ counsel to the health department and chief supervisor of election;²⁶ trustee and schoolteacher;²⁷ prudential committeeman and auditor of a school district;²⁸ school director and deputy treasurer of the township;²⁹ county commissioner and member of the county board of education;³⁰ county auditor and school comptroller;³¹ supervisor of a town and superintendent of the poor;³² supervisor and township treasurer;³³ superintendent of a county infirmary and member of the board of directors of the same institution;³⁴ or treasurer and president of the same institution;³⁵ member of the board of health and sanitary policeman;³⁶ city assessor and member of a board of state tax commissioners;³⁷ Circuit Court commissioner and supervisor of election;³⁸ city marshal and city councilman;³⁹ secretary of a city and recorder;⁴⁰ county commissioner and any city officer.¹ Clerks of one class of courts cannot be made ex officio clerks of another class.²

(5) Incompatible Federal and State Offices. — It is a general rule that a federal officeholder may not at the same time hold a state office.³ Under this rule the following offices have been held to be incompatible: United States centennial commissioner and elector for President;⁴ United States senator and clerk of the Court of Common Pleas;⁵ paymaster in the United States army and clerk of the County Court;⁶ United States district attorney and attorney-general;⁷ colonel in a United States regiment and member of a board of street and water commissioners;⁸ an officer of the United States army on the retired list and mayor of a city⁹ or treasurer of a county;¹⁰ member of assembly and federal judge;¹¹ postmaster and judge of a County Court, or justice of the peace,¹² or county commissioner,¹³ or township collector,¹⁴ or township trustee;¹⁵ deputy United States marshal and commissioner of an incorporated district;¹⁶ deputy inspector and collector of customs and sheriff;¹⁷ major of volunteers in the service of the United States and auditor of accounting;¹⁸ director in a deaf and dumb institution and United States marshal.¹⁹ A lieutenant of a gang of workmen in the navy yard, or a post-office letter carrier, or a clerk in the mint cannot be appointed an election officer.²⁰

A Pending Contest for a State Office does not prevent the contestant from accepting a federal office.²¹

both federal offices.¹

c. HAVING SERVED PRIOR TERM. — It is sometimes provided by constitution or statute that certain officers shall not hold office for more than a specified number of consecutive terms.² This has been construed to refer to strictly consecutive terms, so that the officer is rendered again eligible by an interregnum between his terms.³ No tenure of office short of a full term counts in estimating a term,⁴ and illegality of method in securing one term is no bar to holding office during a subsequent term.⁵ A prohibition against two successive terms does not make one who has filled one term ineligible to fill a vacancy for a part of a term.⁶ Suspension from office does not render the suspended officer ineligible for a succeeding term in the same office.⁷

d. CONVICTION OF CRIME. — A very common disqualification to hold office is conviction of crime,⁸ such as bribery,⁹ embezzlement or defalcation of public funds,¹⁰ duelling,¹¹ polygamy,¹² obtaining votes corruptly,¹³ or insurrection or rebellion against the United States.¹⁴ Previous bad character or habits or mere official misdemeanors will not disqualify one otherwise eligible.¹⁵

Failure to Account for Public Money renders a candidate ineligible to public office.¹⁶

An Officer Who Resigns Pending Proceedings to Remove Him may not be reappointed until he is acquitted or the proceedings are dismissed.¹⁷

e. COLOR. — In Georgia it was decided, soon after the close of the civil war, that in the absence of constitutional prohibition color did not disqualify one from holding office.¹⁸

f. POLITICAL OPINION. — Political opinion cannot be made a test of eligibility to office. And in Indiana and Michigan a law providing for the appointment of election inspectors from each of the two leading political parties has been held to be unconstitutional.¹⁹ In other states, however, a contrary view obtains.²⁰

It has been held that a proviso declaring that "no Black Republican or indorse, or supporter of the Helper book" should be appointed to any office was unconstitutional if it meant to debar one on account of political or religious opinion. Baltimore v. State, 15 Md. 376, 74 Am. Dec. 573.

It has been held that neither the Constitution nor the Civil Service Act was violated by a provision that not more than a certain proportion of the board of commissioners could be taken

g. BEING CLERGYMAN. — A "civil office in this state," from which clergymen are excluded in Delaware, does not mean the office of treasurer of a municipal corporation.¹

h. INTEREST. — It has often been enacted that members of legislative bodies are ineligible to offices created by such bodies, or the salary of which has been increased, and that official participation in the conduct of an election bars one as a candidate at such election.² The same rule applies to officers with the power of appointment. They cannot appoint themselves.³ Thus, it has been held that a registrar of voters cannot be a candidate at the succeeding election,⁴ and that a member of a board of aldermen cannot fill an office by appointment of the board,⁵ even if he resigns from the board during his term of office.⁶ A member of the legislature cannot fill the office of levee commissioner,⁷ nor can a clerk of the bureau of city revenue in New York city hold the position of instructor in the evening high school.⁸ But a candidate for the office of township collector may, it seems, act as judge of his own election,⁹ and a county clerk is not disqualified for election by exercising statutory supervision over the election.¹⁰

i. BEING CORPORATION. — Since it possesses no moral qualities and cannot take the oath, a corporation is not eligible to office.¹¹

7. Removal of Disqualifications. — A disqualification to hold office existing at the time of election may be removed before installation in office,¹² but it cannot be removed by repealing the statute which at the time of his election disqualified the officeholder.¹³ Ineligibility by reason of a conviction of crime is removed by a pardon.¹⁴ One who is ineligible to a second office during the term of his first office does not render himself eligible by resigning the first during the term thereof.¹⁵ The objection to electing an officeholder to an incompatible office is of no force where the acceptance of the latter office ipso facto vacates the former.¹⁶

8. Effect of Electing Ineligible Person. — The election or appointment to office of a person who is not eligible gives him no right to hold the office. The election is simply void.¹⁷ But if he assumes to exercise the functions of the office his acts have the validity of those of a de facto officer.¹⁸ The action of a board of aldermen declaring a person to be elected cannot oust the court of its jurisdiction to inquire into the matter.¹ But adjudging a person to be incapable of holding the office gives to the candidate receiving the next highest number of votes no claim thereto;² on the contrary, the old incumbent has a right to qualify and to hold over until a lawful successor is elected and qualified.³

9. Evidence. — The question of eligibility is one which the courts must settle,⁴ but it cannot be tried in a collateral proceeding.⁵ It has been held that an election certificate is not prima facie evidence of eligibility.⁶ Where one claims to act under special statutory authority, he must show that he has the qualifications thereby required,⁷ and the law may require him to produce a certificate of fitness.⁸

Presumption of Eligibility. — That an officer has been elected and commissioned creates a strong presumption of eligibility.⁹ And the same presumption is indulged in case of appointment to office. Where the appointment is coupled with a condition which has not been performed, it becomes valid if the appointing power subsequently dispenses with the condition.¹⁰

VI. METHODS OF CONFERRING OFFICE — 1. In General. — Public offices are conferred either by election or by appointment.

2. By Election. — All questions concerning elections are fully discussed elsewhere in this work.¹¹

3. By Appointment — a. DEFINITION. — An appointment, as the term is applied to public officers, may be defined as the selection or designation of a person by the person or persons having authority therefor to fill an office or public function and to discharge the duties thereof.¹²

Distinguished from Election. — The term "appointment" is to be distinguished from "election." Election means that the person is chosen by the principle of selection in the nature of a vote, participated in by the public generally or by the entire class of persons qualified to express their choice in this manner.¹³ The fact that the selection or designation for office is made by a collective body does not render it an election as distinguished from an appointment,¹⁴ even if the selection is made by ballot, as this is but a means which the appointing body may adopt for making its choice of the individual to be appointed;¹⁵ nor does the fact that the collective body is directed to "elect" the one whom it will designate for the office render its designation of a certain person an election as distinguished from an appointment.¹⁶ Where the constitution provides that certain officers shall be "elected," the legislature has no power to select or to provide for the designation or selection of such officers by the governor or by a limited collective body, as such designation is an appointment as distinguished from an election.¹ So a constitutional provision prohibiting a state senator from being appointed to any civil office does not prohibit his election to such an office.²

Extension of Term. — An extension by the legislature of the term of an officer is in effect an appointment for such additional term.³

Distinguished from Increase of Power. — An act of the legislature increasing the powers and duties of a public officer is not unconstitutional as an appointment by the legislature to a new office, where such increased duties and powers are germane to those attached to the office at the time of the enactment.⁴

Change in Rank. — So a change in rank is not necessarily an appointment to another office. This is shown in the instances in which the Federal Congress has exercised the power of changing the rank of military officers of the United States army.⁵

b. APPOINTING POWER — (1) In General. — Under the common law of England, the sovereign power belonged to the king, and the power to appoint to public office was unquestionably a sovereign prerogative.⁶ In the United States the general power to appoint officers is not inherent in the executive or in any other branch of the government, but is a prerogative of the people, to be exercised by them or by those departments of government to which it has been either expressly or impliedly confided or reserved in the Constitution.⁷ The several departments of the government have implied authority as incident to their principal power — that is, where necessary to their respective legislative, executive, or judicial powers — to appoint the necessary officers to execute their functions.⁸

Requirement of Election Does Not Apply in Emergencies. — A constitutional provision requiring that particular officers shall be elected does not apply to cases of emergency, such as the creation of a new office, or a vacancy, so as to prevent the appointment of the particular officers in such cases.⁹

(2) Power of Legislature — (a) To Make Appointments. — It has been considered that the legislature has implied power to appoint to public offices unless it is expressly restricted by the constitution with regard to such appointment or unless such power is expressly or impliedly conferred upon some other department or person.¹⁰ A constitutional clause providing for the separation of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, and declaring that no person shall exercise functions under more than one of them, does not deprive the legislature of the power of appointment.¹¹ The legislature may likewise fill offices which it is authorized to create, though the duties of the incumbents may be purely executive.¹

Where the Power to Establish and Maintain Particular Institutions Is Expressly Conferred upon the Legislature, it may appoint the officers for the management and control of such institutions in the absence of a clause expressly denying such power to it.²

Constitutional Provision that Offices Be Filled as Directed by Law. — A general constitutional provision that offices which may be created by the legislature, or whose election or appointment is not otherwise provided for, shall be filled in such manner as may be directed by law, does not prohibit the legislature from making appointments to such offices, nor require that their appointment should be confided to the governor or to some other executive or administrative officer or board.³

A Constitutional Provision Conferring upon the Executive the Power of Appointing All Officers not otherwise provided for, "unless a different mode of appointment be prescribed by the law creating the office," does not deprive the legislature of the power, in creating the office, itself to provide for the appointment of the officer to fill such office.⁴

A Constitutional Provision Conferring General Power upon the Governor to Fill Vacancies in Offices does not prohibit the legislature, in creating a new office, from appointing at the same time a person to fill the office, as in such a case there is no vacancy.⁵ And a constitutional provision conferring upon the governor the power to fill vacancies in a particular office does not prevent the legislature from authorizing the incumbent of a different office to perform the duties of the former office in case of a vacancy, and until an appointment is made by the governor.⁶

Where the Constitution Has Expressly Provided that No Appointing Power Shall Be Exercised by the Legislature except as therein expressly provided, the legislature is absolutely without power to make appointments to public offices unless expressly authorized by the constitution.⁷

Effect of Constitutional Provision for Particular Method of Selection. — If the power to appoint particular officers is expressly conferred upon the governor by the constitution of a state or the organic act of a territory, the legislature has, of course, no power to appoint to such offices;⁸ and the same is, of course, true where the selection of particular officers is required to be by election.⁹ But in Virginia a constitutional provision that certain town officers should be elected was held not to prohibit the legislature, in incorporating a new town, from appointing the officers to exercise their functions until other officers

Court's Power to Review Legislative Appointments. — The judicial department may, where the legislature has asserted a power to appoint to public office, inquire whether such power exists under the constitution;² but the courts cannot inquire into the motive actuating an appointment.³

(b) To Provide Mode of Appointment. — Except when the constitution expressly provides the mode of appointment to office, as by intrusting the appointment of particular officers to some other department or board,⁴ the legislature may provide the mode of appointment to offices which it creates or change existing modes of appointment to offices which it has already created.⁵ Thus, it may undoubtedly commit the power to the governor⁶ or other executive or administrative officer,⁷ or to official collective bodies or boards,⁸ or even to a private body or individual⁹ or a judicial tribunal.¹⁰ In the latter instance, the general constitutional provision dividing the powers of government into the three departments — the legislative, the executive, and the judicial — and prohibiting officers belonging to one department from exercising functions appertaining to another, does not prohibit the legislature from providing for the appointment of particular officers by a judicial tribunal,¹¹ especially where the functions of the officer to be appointed are of a judicial character, or he is in the nature of an officer of the court.¹ In some instances the constitutions have expressly prohibited the legislature from conferring appointing power upon courts.² A constitutional provision expressly depriving the legislature of power to make appointments to office, but not vesting the power in any other department or officer, does not deprive the legislature of power to provide the manner in which officers shall be appointed.³ The legislature may provide the mode in which vacancies in offices may be filled by appointment, though the constitution makes provision for the election of the incumbents of such offices for specified terms.⁴ In some jurisdictions there are provisions in the constitutions intended to secure the local self-government of municipal or quasi-municipal corporations, which restrict the power of the legislature in providing for the appointment of local officers.⁵

Showing Term of Appointment. — Where the appointment is in writing, the term for which it was made may be shown by parol. State v. Fulkerson, 10 Mo. 681. See, however, State v. Meder, 22 Nev. 264.

Signing Instrument of Appointment. — A statute requiring the appointment of a town collector pro tempore to be made by a writing

When Appointment Complete. — Though an appointment when complete cannot be rescinded or revoked,¹ it is not complete before the written certificate of appointment or commission is made out and signed by the appointing power, whether an individual officer or a collective body; and delivery to the appointee is not required.²

No Particular Form of Writing Is Required; it is sufficient if it evidences the intention of the appointing power to make the appointment.³

Issuing or Countersigning Commission. — Where the statute requires that the commission of the appointing power be issued, countersigned, or sealed by some other officer, such issuance, countersigning, and sealing are purely ministerial acts, the performance of which may be compelled by mandamus,⁴ and the refusal of the officer to countersign and seal a commission signed by the appointing power does not render the appointment void.⁵

The Acceptance of the Office by the appointee is distinct from the appointment and is not necessary to render the appointment complete.⁶

A Commission Is Not Conclusive that the officer holding it was duly commissioned, but the courts will, when the authority of such officer is in issue, inquire whether the appointing power was in fact clothed with power to make the appointment;⁷ but if the commission is regular upon its face, it is prima facie evidence of the appointee's right to the office,⁸ and in such a case, if in fact the appointment was unauthorized, the appointment is not absolutely void, but is voidable only, and confers upon the appointee such right to exercise the functions of his office as to render his acts done therein valid so far as they concern the public and third persons.⁹

(3) Appointments by Collective Bodies. — Where the power to appoint is vested in a collective body, and there are no directions as to the mode of appointment, the body may proceed as it pleases in making its selection — by ballot, by resolution, by the adoption of a verbal motion, or in any other manner.¹⁰ It is not necessary that the appointment should be unanimous. The selection may be made by a majority vote of the persons constituting the appointing body,¹¹ or, where there is a sufficient number of the members of the body present at a meeting duly convened to constitute a quorum, by a majority vote of those present,¹ or by a majority vote of those voting though the number of the members voting is not sufficient to constitute a quorum.² It has been held, however, that there must be a majority of the members of the body present at the meeting at which the officer is selected;³ and all members of the body are entitled to notice of any meeting for the purpose of making appointments.⁴ It has been held that where the appointing body is unable to agree upon the officer to be appointed, it is illegal to determine who shall be appointed by drawing lots.⁵

Reconsidering Vote. — The selection by ballot of a person to be appointed does not conclude the appointing body, but it may at the same meeting, and before the result has been communicated to the person selected, reconsider the vote and appoint another person.⁶

(4) Confirmation of Appointment. — In many cases the power to appoint is subject to the provision that the appointment shall be with the consent or advice or confirmation of some particular collective body.⁷ Where the appointing officer or body is authorized to make the appointment only with the consent of some other body, there can be no appointment until such consent has been given; the appointment does not take effect prior to such consent, subject to be defeated by the nonconcurrence of such body. This rule has been applied where appointments were authorized by the governor with the consent of the senate,⁸ or by a mayor with the consent of the city council.⁹ To constitute a valid confirmation, the nominee must receive the confirming votes of a majority of the members of the body voting upon the question,¹⁰ and where he does not receive the required number of votes for confirmation, the fact that the body accepted his official bond is immaterial.¹¹

Time of Nomination and Confirmation. — The appointing power, in the absence of any express limitation, may, of course, nominate and the confirming body consent to the nomination whenever the latter is duly convened.¹²

Confirmation at Special Sessions. — A constitutional limitation on the power of

Time for Nomination to Senate Limited. — A constitutional provision that the governor shall nominate, within a specified time after the senate convenes, all officers to be appointed by him with the consent of the senate does not, where the nomination is made within the proper time, restrict the right of the senate to confirm the nomination after such time. Dyer v. Bayne, 54 Md. 87.

the legislature when convened in extra or special session applies only to acts of legislation — the joint actions of the senate and assembly — and the senate may confirm nominations and appointments by the governor whenever convened, either at general or special sessions.¹

Withdrawing Confirmation. — In Michigan it has been held that where the senate is required to concur in a nomination to office made by the governor, it has power at the same session, before any action on the vote has been taken, to reconsider its vote and refuse to consent to the appointment.² After the session of the confirming body has been adjourned and the result of the vote in confirmation made known, it cannot, at a subsequent session, though the officer nominated had not been informed of his confirmation, revoke its action of confirmation.³

Effect of Confirmation of Nomination. — The confirmation of a nomination by the body whose consent to an appointment is required has been held not to constitute such nomination and confirmation an appointment, but unless the appointing officer has acted on such confirmation by making an appointment, the appointment is still incomplete, and the appointing officer may refuse to complete the appointment.⁴

Compelling Action by Confirming Body. — The courts cannot compel the senate to take action on a nomination by the appointing officer and either confirm or reject the nomination.⁵

(5) Time of Appointment. — It is a common practice and undoubtedly proper for the appointing power, when the necessity for the exercise of the power is ascertained, to make appointments prior in time to that at which the term of office of the appointee is to begin, where the appointing power of the officer or body making the appointment will continue until the term of the appointee is to begin.⁶ Where, however, the appointing power of the officer or body making the appointment will expire before the term of office of its appointee will begin, and vest in its successors, it cannot forestall the right and prerogative of its successors by making appointments to such office.⁷ Statutory provisions directing the time at which appointments are to be made have been held to be directory merely, and when the appointing officers or body failed to make the appointment at the time specified, subsequent

It has been held that such a provision as to the time of nomination, though it applied to offices to be filled under laws existing at the commencement of the session, did not require nominations to offices to be filled under laws enacted during the session to be made within the specified time. *Merrill v. appointments have been sustained as valid.¹

(6) Delegation of Appointing Power. — A public officer, an official board, or an individual upon whom the legislature has conferred the power of appointing officers cannot delegate the appointing power, but they must themselves act in making the appointment.² But an appointment made pursuant to the general direction of the officer in whom the appointing power is vested, and with his sanction, has been held to be in effect an appointment by him.³

(7) Ratification of Unauthorized Appointments. — When a person who is not invested with power to appoint an officer exercises such power, the officer or body in whom the power of appointment is vested may by ratification render the appointment valid.⁴

(8) Rescinding Appointments. — Where the officer or body clothed with the power of appointment has exercised the power and made an appointment, and the appointee is not removable at the will of the appointing officer or body,⁵ such appointing officer or body cannot rescind its appointment.⁶

d. WHO MAY BE APPOINTED TO OFFICE. — As a general rule, any one having the necessary qualifications to hold the office in question may be appointed.⁷

Public Policy. — On the ground of public policy, it has been held that the person or a member of the collective body invested with the appointing power cannot be appointed,⁸ and an appointment to the office of a member of the body invested with the appointing power is especially unauthorized where the vote of such appointee was necessary to secure his appointment.⁹

vacancy in an office whenever there is no incumbent to discharge the duties of the office, that is, whenever the office is empty or unfilled,¹ but as long as there is any one authorized to discharge the duties of the office the office is not to be deemed vacant so as to authorize the exercise of the power to fill vacancies in the office.²

New Office. — Whenever a new office is created and no one is designated by the legislature to fill it, there exists a vacancy in the office so as to authorize the exercise of a power to fill vacancies in such office,³ but if, at the time a new office is created by the legislature, the legislature designates the person to fill the office, a vacancy in the office does not arise so as to authorize the governor to exercise his general constitutional power to fill vacancies in office.⁴

Termination of Term. — Where the authority of an officer to discharge the duties of his office absolutely terminates upon the termination by lapse of time of his express term, and at such time there is no one to qualify for the discharge of the duties of the office, there is a vacancy in the office.⁵

Officer Holding Over. — But where the incumbent of an office holds over after the expiration of his express term until the qualification of his successor, there does not exist, upon the expiration of his express term, a vacancy in the office so as to authorize the exercise of a power to fill vacancies in such office.⁶

The Failure of an Elected Candidate to Qualify so as to enable him to enter upon the discharge of the duties of the office creates a vacancy in the office.⁷

Death of Elected Candidate Before Entering into Office. — Where a newly elected officer qualifies but dies before the time he is to enter upon the discharge of his duties, a vacancy occurs at the time he was entitled to enter into the office, if his predecessor was entitled to hold only until the election and qualification of his successor,¹ but not at the time of his death.²

Nonuser. — An office may become vacant by reason of the incumbent's ceasing to discharge the duties of the office so as to authorize an exercise of a power to appoint to fill vacancies.³

Accepting Incompatible Office. — When the incumbent of one office accepts another incompatible office, the nature and duties of the two offices being such as to render it improper, from considerations of public policy, for him to retain both, a vacancy in the first office is created.⁴

Resignation. — The resignation of the incumbent may create a vacancy,⁵ provided his resignation has been accepted.⁶ When the resignation is to take effect in the future, there is no vacancy until the time comes when the incumbent is to give up his office.⁷

Statutory Provisions. — The statutes in some instances expressly enumerate certain contingencies and circumstances which shall create a vacancy in public offices,⁸ such as the insanity of the incumbent;⁹ absence from the state;¹⁰ in case of local offices, change of residence, or removal from the locality or district with which the office is connected;¹¹ the absconding of an incumbent.¹² A statutory enumeration of the circumstances and contingencies which shall create a vacancy in office is not necessarily an exclusive enumeration, but a vacancy may occur under circumstances which at common law would create a vacancy,¹³ and the fact that the constitution provides in some instances what shall operate a vacancy in office does not prohibit the legislature from enumerating other causes.¹⁴

(b) Time of Vacancy. — Where the executive is authorized to fill by appointment vacancies "which may happen during the recess of the senate" or of the "legislature," it has been held that the phrase "which may happen" meant "which may happen to exist," and that a vacancy existed in an office during a recess of the senate or legislature, though the vacancy first occurred while it was in session.¹⁵ In Illinois, however, it was held, under the state constitution empowering the governor to make appointments to fill certain offices which "shall during the recess" of the general assembly "become vacant," that the governor had no power during the recess of the general assembly to fill a vacancy which first occurred while the assembly was in session.¹

(e) Determination as to Existence of Vacancy. — When there is no method provided for determining whether a vacancy in fact exists, it follows that, as the office must be filled, the appointing officer or body is to inquire into and decide whether a vacancy exists, but while his commission to fill a vacancy which he has determined existed is prima facie evidence of the existence of the vacancy and his appointee's right to the office, still it is not conclusive upon such fact so as to destroy the incumbent's title to the office,² and where the vacancy occurs by reason of the happening of the certain contingencies which would create a vacancy, it is not necessary that there should be a judicial investigation and decision that the vacancy exists before the power to fill the vacancy may be exercised;³ but if there was in fact no vacancy the attempted exercise of the power to fill vacancies is absolutely void and the appointee acquires no title to the office, even if the incumbent surrenders the office to him.⁴

VII. TITLE TO OFFICE — 1. In General. — Most questions concerning title to office are discussed fully elsewhere, and therefore only a few brief statements will be made here.⁵

Title Necessary to Support Action. — In an action to recover a public office the plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title rather than upon the weakness of the title of his adversary; and the burden rests upon the plaintiff to show legal title to the office.⁶

Validity of Law Creating Office. — When the parties to the action treat the law creating the office as a valid enactment, and each makes his title to the office he is claiming through the law, they do not stand in a position to call in question the validity of such law.⁷

2. Method of Determining Title. — The proper method of determining title to office is by quo warranto.⁸ Mandamus is not the proper remedy.⁹ Nor can the right to an office be determined upon a bill for an injunction.¹⁰ As a general rule, title to office cannot be inquired into collaterally.¹ It cannot be determined in a proceeding to gain possession of books, papers, and other property pertaining to a public office,² and it has been held that it cannot be determined in an action for the fees of the office.³

3. Rights Pending Contest. — The holder of a certificate of election or duly issued commission has prima facie title, and pending the determination of the court in which the contest is originally brought is entitled to take possession of the office, discharge its duties, and receive the emoluments thereof.⁴ After the determination of such court, the holder of the judgment thereof has prima facie title, with the rights above enumerated, pending an appeal. The judgment is self-executing, except so far as the question of costs is concerned, and its force and effect are neither stayed, suspended, nor obstructed by an appeal therefrom.⁵

acceptance by the person chosen.¹ The acceptance need not, however, in the absence of statutory requirement, be signified in express terms. It may be implied from previous conduct, as well as a subsequent receipt of a commission, taking the oath of office, giving bond, or discharging some of the duties of the office.² The fact that a person consents to being voted for as a candidate for an office does not constitute an acceptance of the office.³

Statutory Requirement of Express Acceptance. — Statutes requiring an officer-elect to file a written acceptance of the office within a designated time are generally regarded as directory and not mandatory, and failure to comply does not work a forfeiture of the office,⁴ nor create a vacancy therein, especially where the officer-elect immediately enters upon the performance of the duties of the office and continues therein.⁵ Where the statute further provides that failure to file the acceptance shall be deemed a refusal to serve, it has been held that filing of the acceptance is essential to complete the title of the officer-elect, and if he exercises the functions of the office without so doing, it is as an officer de facto and not de jure.⁶

b. DUTY OF APPOINTEE OR OFFICER-ELECT TO ACCEPT. — It is held in numerous English decisions that by the common law it was the duty of every person having the requisite qualifications elected or appointed to a public office to accept the same, and that a refusal to accept was punishable.⁷ This duty has been recognized in several of the American states,⁸ and is enforceable by mandamus.⁹ Nor does the fact that the legislature has imposed a penalty for refusal to accept preclude resort to mandamus where the statute does not provide that the penalty shall be in lieu of service.¹⁰

Power of Legislature to Compel Acceptance. — The legislature has the power to require any citizen to serve in a public office, even against his will.¹¹ A Refusal to Accept Creates Vacancy. — The refusal of a person elected to a newly-created office to accept the same constitutes a vacancy in such office, authorizing the appointment of another person thereto by the governor under a constitutional provision authorizing him to appoint in case of a vacancy. People v. Wilson, 72 N. Car. 155.

Acceptance No Part of Appointment. — Under a statute providing that the executive may in certain contingencies appoint one of several persons who shall be recommended by the justices of a court, to a designated office, the executive having appointed one of several persons so designated cannot, on such appointee's refusal to act, appoint another one of the persons so recommended to the office, since the acceptance is no part of the appointment, and one appointment having been made the recommendation is functus officio. Justices v. Clark, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 82.

Qualifying under Void Election Not Acceptance Thereunder. — Where one who is regularly appointed to an office, and is the valid incumbent thereof, is by a void election elected to the same office, the filing of an oath of office by him for the purpose of qualifying under the void election does not preclude him from averring that he did not accept and enter upon the duties of the office under the election. On the other hand he is at liberty to assert that he is exercising the functions of the office under his appointment rather than by virtue of the election, being entitled to the office until his successor is elected and qualified. Forristal v. People, 3 Ill. App. 470.

statute imposing a penalty for refusing to accept a public office is constitutional.¹ In an action to recover a penalty it has been held that the fact that the officer was elected to another office and that he has accepted it is a good defense.² Where the statute requires the appointment of another in the place of one who refuses to serve, the same person cannot be reappointed so as to make him liable for the payment of the penalty a second time.³

2. Qualification — a. DEFINITION. — The term "qualification" as used in the statutes herein referred to means the taking of the required oath of office, or the giving of an official bond, or both, as may be required.⁴

b. NECESSITY OF QUALIFYING AND EFFECT OF OMISSION — (1) Qualification Condition Precedent to Holding Office. — The constitutions of the various states and the statutes generally, or in reference to particular offices, usually provide that a person elected or appointed to office shall, before he enters upon the duties of his office, take an oath to faithfully perform the duties of the office and give a bond so conditioned. Where such statutes exist compliance therewith is a condition precedent to the officer's right to exercise the functions of the office.⁵ In the United States courts statutes requiring an appointed officer to take an oath or give bond before entering on the discharge of his duties are held to be directory only, and not conditions precedent to the right to exercise the functions of the office.⁶ Mere irregularities in the qualification of an officer or in his attempt to qualify, where he has entered upon the discharge of his duties, cannot be inquired into in a collateral proceeding for the purpose of invalidating his right or title to the office.⁷

(2) Presumption of Qualification. — It will be presumed, as to third persons, that an officer who has been regularly elected to an office and who is in discharge of the functions thereof, has taken the required oath and given an official bond.⁸ No such presumption exists, however, in favor of the officer

Penalty Not Incurred by Failure to File Written Acceptance. — Under a statute providing that a person elected to a designated office shall within a designated time after the election deliver a written acceptance of the office to a designated officer, and further providing that in case he neglects so to do his failure shall be considered a refusal to serve and the person elected be subjected to a penalty, it was held that the object of the act was to enforce the performance of the duties of the office by the person elected thereto, and his failure to deliver a written acceptance, where he entered upon and discharged the duties of the office, did not subject him to the penalty. Winnegar v. Roe, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 258.

Sufficiency of Excuse. — Under a statute imposing a penalty for refusing to serve in a public office unless excused by a designated board, the sufficiency of the reason is not a matter for judicial investigation, but is for the board. Brooklyn v. Scholes, 31 Hun (N. Y.) 110.

Qualification Prerequisite of Incumbency. — Where the statutes provide that an officer shall before he enters on the discharge of the duties of his office take an oath and give bond, an appointee, prior to his qualification, is not an "incumbent" of the office to which he was appointed within the purview of a statute providing that it shall not be applicable to "present incumbents." *State v. himself, and if he seeks to justify the doing of an act as having been done in his official capacity¹ or seeks to enforce some right by virtue thereof, he must show that he had duly qualified.²

(3) Effect of Failure to Qualify — (a) Official Acts of Officer as to Public and Third Persons. — The failure of a person duly elected or appointed to an office to take the prescribed oath or give a bond as required, or either, does not, when he has proceeded to exercise the functions of the office, invalidate his acts so far as the public or third persons are concerned. As to them, his acts are as valid as though he were an officer de jure. His title to the office cannot be attacked collaterally, but only by direct proceedings in the nature of quo warranto.³ The failure to qualify constitutes a ground for ousting him from the office.⁴

(b) As to Rights of Officer. — The officer cannot in such case recover compensation for services rendered in his official capacity.⁵ In the United States courts, where the taking of the oath or giving of the bond by appointees is not regarded as a condition precedent to the enjoyment of the office, it is held that an officer who has entered on the discharge of the duties of the office without qualifying may on subsequently qualifying recover compensation for services rendered before qualifying.⁶ In jurisdictions where qualification is regarded as a condition precedent to the enjoyment of the office, he is not entitled to compensation for services rendered before qualification.⁷ Nor can an officer who has not qualified justify the doing of any act which it would be unlawful for him to do as a private citizen, on the ground that it was done in his official capacity.⁸ The fact that he took the prescribed oath

Justification in Criminal Prosecution. — In a prosecution for murder, the defendant, who had been regularly appointed as a deputy constable, was allowed to show in justification of the homicide that he was acting in his official before he was legally appointed or elected to the office does not operate as such justification.¹

(c) As to Tenure of Predecessor in Office. — When the statutes provide that officers shall continue in office until their successors are elected and qualified, the failure of an officer-elect to qualify does not create a vacancy authorizing the appointment or election of another thereto, but the incumbent continues not merely as an officer de facto but as an officer de jure.²

(4) Time Within Which Officer Must Qualify. — Where the statutes provide that persons elected to a designated office shall qualify within a certain number of days after the election, the officer may qualify at any time after election and before the expiration of such time and thereupon immediately supersede the authority of his predecessor who holds until a successor is elected and qualified.³

If There Is No Statute in reference to an office prescribing the time within which the oath and bond shall be filed, a duly elected officer who files his oath before the commencement of quo warranto proceedings against him will be adjudged entitled to the office.⁴

Effect of Contest. — When the election under which an office is claimed is contested, statutes prescribing the time within which the officer shall qualify do not apply until the termination of the contest,⁵ and he will be entitled to the office if he thereafter qualifies,⁶ though the statute also provides that failure to qualify within the prescribed time shall create a vacancy.⁷ So, too, it has been held under such a statute that where an officer does some of the things necessary to qualify, and through no fault of his own is precluded from completing the qualification within the prescribed time, the subsequent performance of the acts necessary to completion of the qualification will be deemed to relate to the prior acts and constitute a compliance with the statute.⁸ A statute giving a specified time for qualification after the determination of a contest has been held to afford a reasonable time for qualification after the determination of proceedings analogous to, though not technically, a contest, and which had prevented earlier qualification.⁹ The constructions placed on various dissimilar statutes prescribing the time within which the oath shall be taken or the bond given are set forth in the notes.¹⁰ capacity and killed the deceased while he was resisting arrest, though the defendant had never taken the prescribed oath of office; this on the theory that the defendant was a de facto officer and was entitled to protection to the extent that others were bound to respect his official character. State v. Dierberger, 90 Mo. 369.

When Statute Does Not Make Taking of Oath Condition Precedent. — Foot v. Stiles, 57 N. Y. 399.

Within Designated Time After Receipt of Commission Not Conferring Right of Office. — State v. Lewis, 10 Ohio St. 129.

(5) Effect of Failure to Qualify Within Prescribed Time.—Statutes prescribing the time within which an official oath¹ shall be taken, or a bond² given or filed,³ are generally held to be directory only, and a failure to comply therewith does not ipso facto forfeit the office, and if the officer subsequently and before the commencement of proceedings to forfeit the office complies with the requirements of the statute, he is entitled to the office.⁴ Such omission at the utmost merely affords a ground for forfeiture in direct proceedings therefor.⁵

Where Statute Declares Vacancy.—In some instances the statutes prescribing the time within which the officer must qualify also provide that the office shall be deemed or become vacant on the refusal, failure, or neglect of the officer to give his bond or take the oath within the time prescribed. In some jurisdictions such statutes are regarded as directory only.⁶ And if the officer qualifies before proceedings are commenced to oust him from the office,⁷

Completion of Qualification After Commencement of Quo Warranto.—Where the statute requires an officer to give several bonds before entering upon the performance of his duties his failure to give one of the prescribed bonds does not operate to deprive him of the office where he subsequently gives such bond, though it be not given until after the commencement of quo warranto proceedings to oust him from the office. In a Criminal Prosecution against an officer for misconduct in office the fact that he did not file his bond within the time prescribed by law is no defense. Having occupied the office and discharged its duties it is immaterial so far as his criminal liability is concerned whether he was an officer de facto or de jure.

Statute Not Self-executing.—Under a statute providing that if the officer shall neglect, refuse, or be unable to file his bond within the prescribed time, the office shall immediately expire and be deemed and taken to be vacant, a regularly elected officer exercising the functions of the office who has failed to give a bond within the required time is a de facto officer whose acts as to third persons and the public are valid until his office has been declared forfeited in a direct proceeding. Clark v. Ennis, 45 N. J. L. 69, criticised in State v. Lansing, 46 Neb. 523; Crawford v. Howard, 9 Ga. 314; Stokes v. Kirkpatrick, 1 Met. (Ky.) 138; Horton v. Parsons, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 42. See also Monteith v. Com., 15 Gratt. (Va.) 172.

Effect of Failure to Renew Bond.—Under a statute requiring an officer to renew his official bond annually and further providing that his failure to do so shall create a vacancy, the office does not ipso facto become vacant by reason of the officer's failure to renew his bond. He continues the rightful incumbent of the office until a vacancy is declared by a competent tribunal, authorized by law to declare a vacancy, and his bond is liable for delinquencies during the time he so continues in office. Vann v. Pipkin, 77 N. Car. 408.

7. Appointment of Another Precludes Qualification After Prescribed Time.—Where an officer fails to file a sufficient bond within the prescribed time, and a vacancy is declared, and another elected thereto who duly qualifies, the first officer cannot by subsequently giving a sufficient bond entitle himself to the office. Cole v. Patterson, 97 N. Car. 360.

The officer's failure to file a sufficient bond within the prescribed time authorizes the appointment of another to the office. Ross v. People, 78 Ill. 375.

Judicial Determination of the Fact of Vacancy Not Necessary.—In State v. Tucker, 54 Ala. 205, it was held that failure to qualify within the prescribed time authorized the appointment of another to the office without a judicial though after the expiration of the prescribed time¹ he will be held to be entitled to the office. The failure to qualify is, in such jurisdictions, regarded merely as a ground for forfeiture which may be waived.² The tendency of the decisions in those jurisdictions holding such statutes directory is to restrict the officer's right to qualify after the expiration of the prescribed time to those instances where his failure to qualify within the prescribed time was due to some good reason beyond his control.³ In an application for mandamus to compel the acceptance and approval of a bond tendered after the expiration of the prescribed time the burden rests on the officer-elect to explain the delay and exculpate himself from blame.⁴

Statute Requiring Qualification Within Prescribed Time Mandatory. — In other jurisdictions such statutes are regarded as mandatory.⁵ Failure to do such acts within the prescribed time ipso facto creates a vacancy⁶ and deprives the determination of the fact of vacancy, overruling and criticising Sprowl v. Lawrence, 33 Ala. 674; State v. Ely, 43 Ala. 568, and Ex p. Candee, 48 Ala. 386. But see State v. Towne, 21 La. Ann. 490; Shartzer v. School Dist., 90 Pa. St. 192.

Obviously such would be the case where the statutes merely authorize but do not make it obligatory upon designated officers to declare a vacancy and appoint another thereto, in case the appointee or officer-elect fails to qualify within the prescribed time. State v. Lewis, 10 Ohio St. 129.

Failure to Take Additional Oath Within Prescribed Time. — Under a statute requiring designated officers to take a designated oath within a specified time after the passage of the act and further providing that a failure to take the oath shall disqualify the officer from holding or from continuing to hold the office, the failure to take the oath within the prescribed time does not create a vacancy in the office, but merely furnishes a cause for forfeiture by direct proceedings. People v. Mt. Vernon, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 204, affirmed 128 N. Y. 657. See also State v. Towne, 21 La. Ann. 490.

Failure of Officer Holding Over to Requalify. — Under a statute providing that an officer holding over shall qualify anew within a specified time, the failure of the officer holding over to requalify within the prescribed time creates a vacancy to which the appointing power has authority to appoint another. State v. Cosgrove, 34 Neb. 386. See also State v. Boyd, 31 Neb. 682.

Taking Wrong Oath Within Prescribed Time. — Under Const. Refusal to Accept Creates Vacancy. — Under a statute providing that an office shall become vacant upon the refusal or neglect of the incumbent to take his oath of office or to give or renew his official bond, or to deposit such oath or bond within the time prescribed by law, an officer who has been elected to succeed himself, who during the continuance of the first term resigns the office to take effect on the first day of the succeeding term, will be deemed to have refused to qualify under the second election so as to create a vacancy in the office authorizing an appointment thereto by the appointing power, though at the time of such appointment

c. OATH OF OFFICE — (1) Power of Legislature to Prescribe Official Oaths. — A constitutional provision requiring officers to take an oath to support the constitution of the United States and of the state does not preclude the legislature from requiring an additional oath,² but it has no power to require as a condition precedent to the right to hold office that the person seeking to enjoy the office should take an oath that he has not done any act which at the time of the doing of it was not lawful, since such a statute is in contravention of the constitutional provision that no state shall pass any bill of attainder.³ The Federal Constitution prohibits the requirement of any oath which imposes a religious test.⁴

Where Constitution Prescribes Form of Oath. — Where the constitution prescribes the form of oath which shall be taken by all officers,⁵ and further provides that "no other oath, declaration, or test shall be required as a qualification for any office," a statute requiring a successful candidate to file a sworn statement of his election expenses as a prerequisite to his right to the office is unconstitutional,⁶ as is a statute requiring an oath of an excise officer to the effect that he is not interested in the sale or manufacture of intoxicating liquors.⁷

(2) False Swearing as Affecting Right to Office. — When the statutes require that an officer-elect shall take a prescribed oath, and further provide that if he shall fail to take it within a specified time the office shall become vacant, but do not declare that there shall be a vacancy in case the officer swears falsely in taking the oath, or that he shall in that case be disqualified from holding the office, the fact that he swore falsely in taking the prescribed oath does not constitute a ground of forfeiture, though he may be punishable for perjury.⁸

(3) Who May Administer. — Statutes providing that the official oaths of designated officers shall be taken before other designated officers are generally regarded as directory only, and the taking before some other officer the time within which the re-elected officer might file his oath and bond had not elapsed. State v. Washburn, 17 Wis. 658.

Under such statute the failure of the officer-elect to file his official oath in the proper office within the prescribed time creates a vacancy authorizing the election of another thereto. State v. Goetze, 22 Wis. 364. Compare State v. Dahl, 65 Wis. 510.

Failure to Give Bond as to Office Held Ex Officio. — Under a statute providing that failure to take the oath of office or neglect to give a bond within the time prescribed by law shall work a vacation of the office, the refusal of a person who holds an office ex officio to give a bond required of him as to such ex officio office does not vacate the major office, but it does vacate the office held ex officio. State v. Laughton, 19 Nev. 202.

3. Cummings v. State, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 277.

5. What Officers Within Purview of Constitutional Requirement of Oath. — A constitutional requirement that "every person elected or appointed to any office under the constitution shall before entering upon the duties thereof, take an oath * * * of office," requires an oath of office only from persons seeking to enjoy an office created or provided for by that instrument and does not require an oath of officers created and charged by the legislature with the performance of ministerial duties. David v. Portland Water Committee, 14 Oregon 98.

Under a constitutional provision "that all civil officers, except * * * such inferior officers as may be by law exempted shall before they enter on the duties of their office" take a prescribed oath, the manifest intention on the part of the legislature that an inferior officer should not be required to take an oath of office is, without any express statutory exemption, an exemption of such officer from the constitutional requirement. School Directors v. People, 79 Ill. 511.

6. Requirement of Sworn Statement of Election Expenses Unconstitutional. — Bradley v. Clark, 133 Cal. 196.

7. People v. Palen, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 289.

8. Perjury in Taking Oath Not Ground of Forfeiture. — People v. Thornton, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 456, in which the officer untruthfully took oath that he had not offered bribes to voters at the election at which he was elected. See also the title PERJURY, vol. 22, pp. 684-690.

authorized to administer oaths is sufficient to entitle the person to the office.¹

(4) Duty to Administer.—Where the statutes merely provide that the official oath of designated officers shall be taken before a specified officer, it is the duty of the latter to administer the oath on the production of prima facie evidence that the applicant is entitled to the office. Such officer is not authorized to determine whether or not the applicant is entitled to the office.² The performance of such duty may be coerced by mandamus.³

(5) Form of Oath and Manner of Taking—(a) Form.—Substantial compliance with the form prescribed is essential to the validity of the oath.⁴ But if a material part of the oath be omitted it is as though no oath had been taken.⁵

(b) Manner of Taking.—The inauguration ceremonies usually observed on the occasion of the taking of the oath of office by officers holding high offices in the state governments are not essential to the validity of the qualification.⁶ In most, if not all, of the states an affirmation may be made in lieu of an oath.⁷

(c) Necessity of Oath Being in Writing and Recorded.—In the absence of statutory requirement it is not necessary that the official oath should be recorded.⁸ It has been held that a statute requiring the official oath to be in writing, subscribed, and filed was mandatory and compliance essential to an investiture with the powers of the office.⁹ On the other hand, such a statute has been held to be directory only.¹⁰ In either case, if the officer assumes to act without complying with the statute, his acts are valid as to the public and third persons,¹¹ and the sureties on the official bond of the officer are liable for his defaults.¹²

(d) Evidence that Oath Was Taken.—A record reciting that one purporting to be the incumbent of an office "took the oath of office" is sufficient evidence that he took the oath prescribed by law;¹³ though a recital that he was Ct.) 9 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 456. But see State v. Perkins, 24 N. J. L. 409, holding under a statute requiring certain officers to be sworn before a justice of the peace, that the taking of the oath before an officer who was not a justice but was vested with all the powers and authority of a justice, did not make the person taking the oath a de jure officer, though his acts as to the public and third persons were valid as those of a de facto officer. Where the statute prescribes the form of oath which shall be taken and that it shall be deposited in a designated office, a certificate by an officer authorized to administer the oath, to the effect that the officer was sworn, is an insufficient compliance with the statute, and the officer is not entitled to the emoluments of the office. Halbeck v. New York, (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 439.

11. Brunott v. M'Kee, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 513.

12. Indorsement of Oath on Certificate of Appointment.—Where the statutes provide that the oath shall be indorsed on the back of the officer's certificate of appointment, the fact that it is on a separate paper attached to the certificate or indorsed on the face thereof does not affect the validity of the qualification. State v. Horton, 19 Nev. 199. See also Brown v. Foster, 2 Met. (Mass.) 155.

13. Recital that Officer "Took the Oath of Office."—Scammon v. Scammon, 28 N. H. 419.

A certificate that M. "took the oaths of office as prescribed by the constitution and laws for" the office which he claimed, was held to be sufficient evidence that the proper oath had been taken, but, the certificate not reciting such fact, it could not be presumed that the oath was subscribed as required by law. Harwood v. Marshall, 9 Md. 83.

"sworn into office" has been held insufficient,¹ as has a recital that the officer "qualified."²

d. OFFICIAL BONDS — (1) Power of Legislature to Require Bond. — In the absence of constitutional provision it is exclusively within the power of the legislature to determine from what officers official bonds shall be required, the penalty, condition, and obligation of such bonds, and the qualifications of the sureties thereon.³ While the legislature has no power to deprive individuals of accrued causes of action arising from the breach of existing bonds, it has plenary power to exact from a public officer as a condition precedent to his right to continue in the office, a new or additional bond, variant in penalty, condition, and obligation from that required from him at the time he entered into the office.⁴

(2) Necessity of Giving Bond. — The necessity of giving a bond in accordance with the requirements of the statutes,⁵ as a condition precedent to the enjoyment of the office, has been hereinbefore treated.⁶

(3) Form of Bond as Affecting Right to Office. — When a statute requiring a bond prescribes its form, the terms in which it shall be conditioned, or the amount for which it shall be given, a substantial variance from the prescribed form involves the same consequences, so far as the right to the office is concerned, as though no bond were given.⁷ Nor does the fact that the officer charged with the approval of the bond has approved it avoid the effect of failure to condition it as required by statute, since such officer has no power to waive the requirements of the statute.⁸

(4) Approval — (a) Necessity of Approval. — Where the statutes in regard to the qualification of appointees or officers-elect provide that they shall, before they enter on the duties of their office, give a bond to be approved by a designated officer, the approval is regarded as a condition precedent to the right to exercise the functions of the office.⁹ And if he seeks to justify the doing of any act as having been done by virtue of his office, he must show that his bond was approved by the proper authorities before the doing of

3. Power of Legislature to Require Official Bonds. — Ex p. Buckley, 53 Ala. 42.

Power to Prescribe Qualifications of Sureties. — A statute requiring that sureties on official bonds of county officers should have unexempt property in the county exceeding in amount the penalty of the bond over and above debts and liabilities is not unconstitutional, though the constitution provides that "the sureties on official bonds shall have sufficient property within the state not exempt from sale * * * to make good their bonds," since under such section no officer has a vested right to have a person so qualified, approved of as a surety. Oliver v. Martin, 36 Ark. 134.

4. Power to Require Additional Bonds. — Ex p. Buckley, 53 Ala. 42; Ketler v. Thompson, 13 Bush (Ky.) 287; Hyde v. State, 52 Miss. 665.

5. Bond Not Necessary in Absence of Statutory Requirement. — The failure of an officer who holds over under the constitutional provision until his successor is elected and qualified does not forfeit his office for failure to file a bond for such time as he shall hold over where there is no statute requiring the giving of such a bond. State v. Compson, 34 Oregon 25.

Under a statute providing that a certain officer shall give a bond for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, and another statute charging in certain cases another officer with the duties and powers of the former, the latter is not required to give bond, it not being otherwise required, since the duties and powers referred to do not relate to the election and qualification of the latter officer, but to those things which he is required by law to do subsequently. Quimby v. Wood, 19 R. I. 571.

such act.¹ The tender of a bond which is, as a matter of fact, sufficient, is not a compliance with the condition, where it is not approved by the officer charged with that duty.² If, however, an officer proceeds to act without having his bond approved, he is a de facto officer, and his acts are valid as to the public and third persons.³

(b) Formal Approval Not Necessary. — When an officer files a bond with the officers charged with the approval thereof, and such officer retains such bond and thereafter recognizes the officer filing it as the incumbent of the office, an approval of the bond will be implied and a formal approval is not necessary.⁴

(c) Presumption of Approval. — In an action on an official bond, if the bond, regular in every way, is produced from the proper depository, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence that it was rejected, that it was approved and accepted by the officer charged with that duty.⁵

(d) Indorsement of Approval by Approving Officer. — Statutes requiring the approving officer to indorse his approval on the bond are regarded as directory only, and the officer-elect having filed a good and satisfactory bond is entitled to the office though the approving officer omit to indorse his approval thereon.⁶ Nor can the principal and sureties set up the want of such indorsement as a defense to an action on the bond.⁷

(e) Effect of Failure to Secure Approval Within Prescribed Time. — Where an officer-elect files a bond within the time limited, the fact that it was not approved by the board charged with that duty until after the lapse of the prescribed time will not operate to vacate the office, though the statute provides that failure to have the bond approved and filed within the time limited shall vacate the office. The subsequent approval will be deemed to relate back to the time the bond was delivered for approval.⁸ In some jurisdictions such statutes are regarded as directory only, and mandamus will lie to compel the approval of a bond presented after the expiration of the prescribed time, when no vacancy has been declared and no other person has been appointed to the office.⁹ In other jurisdictions the right to have a bond which was not seasonably filed approved is denied.¹⁰

(f) Powers and Duties of Officer Charged with Approval. — Where the statute merely provides that an appointee or officer-elect shall, before he enters on the duties of his office, give a bond to be approved by a designated officer,¹¹ the latter

Effect of Subsequent Formal Approval on Intermediate Acts. — In an action on a bond, if the bond has been delivered to the officers charged with its approval within the time limited and no objection is made thereto, it will be presumed to have been approved, and a subsequent formal approval will not affect intermediate acts. Rogers v. Pugh, 1 Disney (Ohio) 443.

Failure to Secure Approval on Additional Bond Within Time. — Under a statute providing that sureties on an official bond may be relieved of liability thereon by giving notice to the officer charged with the duty of approving such officer's bond and further providing that if the officer shall fail within a specified time to file a bond to be approved by such officer the office shall be declared vacant, an officer who has, pursuant to the requirements of a new bond, filed a sufficient bond is entitled to his office, though the officer or board charged with the duty of approving the bond refused to act thereon within the prescribed time. *People v. is only authorized to pass on the sufficiency of the bond as to form and sufficiency; he has no jurisdiction to determine which of several claimants is entitled to the office.¹ It is his duty to pass on a bond presented by a person having prima facie right to the office.²

Compelling Officer to Act by Mandamus. — In some jurisdictions it is held that the rejection or approval of an official bond is a ministerial function,³ and mandamus will lie to compel the officer charged with the duty of approving the bond to exercise his discretion as to its approval in a lawful manner.⁴ If the bond is admitted to be correct as to form and sufficiency, the writ will issue to compel its approval.⁵ While the title to the office cannot be litigated on an application for mandamus to compel the approval of a bond admitted to be sufficient, still sufficient inquiry may be made to ascertain whether the applicant has a prima facie right to the office.⁶ In other jurisdictions the approval of official bonds is held to be a judicial function⁷ the exercise of which will not be controlled by mandamus.⁸

(5) Requirement of New or Additional Bond. — The effect of the failure of an officer who has, subsequent to his due qualification, been required to give a new or additional bond, to comply with such requisition, is treated elsewhere in this title.⁹

(6) Liability on Bond. — Questions concerning the liability of the officer and his sureties on official bonds are treated elsewhere in this work under titles referred to in the notes.¹⁰

IX. AUTHORITY, POWERS, RIGHTS, AND DUTIES OF PUBLIC OFFICERS — 1. In General. — The authority and powers of public officers with their corresponding rights and duties are generally conferred and prescribed by constitutional or statutory provisions, and their powers must be exercised, and their duties performed, in accordance therewith.¹¹

the approval of official bonds by the officers of a certain board, the fact that such officers in approving a bond purported to act in a capacity other than that designated, does not invalidate their approval, since done by the persons designated by the statute. *Com. v. public body cannot delegate powers which require the exercise of judgment and discretion, but authority to do acts merely ministerial or mechanical may be delegated.¹ The delegation of authority by legislative² and judicial³ officers, and by officers and agents of municipal corporations⁴ and counties⁵ is discussed elsewhere. The exercise of official authority by deputy is also discussed in another title in this work.⁶

9. Exercise of Authority by Official Body — a. IN GENERAL. — When authority to do an act of a public nature is conferred by law upon a body or board of officers, one of such body or board cannot, independently of the others, and without the concurrence of them, or some of them, exercise such authority.⁷

b. MAJORITY ACTION. — When it is not otherwise provided by law it is not, however, necessary that all the members of such body or board should concur in the exercise of such authority. If all meet and consult and a majority agree to an act, such act is valid, even although the minority expressly dissent.⁸ Or if all have due notice of the time and place of meeting, it is no objection to the validity of the action taken that all the members do not attend, if there is a quorum.¹ It seems that the action of a majority of a quorum, assembled after due notice, will bind the whole body.² When action has been taken by such board or body, the presumption is that all the members thereof were present and participated in the deliberations, unless the contrary expressly appears.³

c. WHEN ONLY TWO PERSONS CONSTITUTE BODY. — When the performance of a power or duty is confined to only two persons, nothing can be done without the consent of both.⁴

d. TWO OR MORE BODIES. — When authority is conferred on two or more bodies, they must all come together for consultation and deliberation; but when they do, the vote of the majority of the persons present controls, even though one of the bodies should leave before the vote is taken.⁵

When Body Consists of Two Integral Parts,

e. DISTINCTION AS TO EXERCISE OF MINISTERIAL AND JUDICIAL AUTHORITY. — If the act is merely ministerial in its character, a majority at least must concur and unite in the performance of it; but they may act separately and need not be convened in a body, or notified so as to convene for that purpose. But if the act is one that requires the exercise of discretion and judgment, in which case it is usually termed a judicial act, unless special provision is otherwise made, the persons to whom the authority is given must meet and confer together, and be present when the act is performed.¹

f. STATUTORY REGULATION. — In some instances the exercise of authority by a board or body of public officers has been expressly regulated by statute.²

Exemption from Arrest and Service of Process. — The Constitution of the United States provides for the exemption from arrest of members of Congress during their attendance at the sessions of their respective houses, and in going to and returning from the same.¹ And under the constitutions of many of the states members of state legislatures are privileged from arrest and from service of process under the same circumstances.²

13. Exemption from Actions for Libel and Slander. — The exemption of public officers from actions for libel and slander is discussed elsewhere in this work.³

14. Invalidity of Statute Prescribing Duty. — The decisions are far from harmonious as to the duty of an officer to act under a statute the validity of which he considers doubtful, and as to the protection afforded him if he does act under such a statute.

a. RIGHT TO QUESTION VALIDITY. — In some cases it has been held that the validity of a statute requiring the performance of a purely ministerial duty cannot be called in question by an officer, and that obedience to the law is required until its constitutionality is passed upon by the judiciary.⁴ Again it has been said that in advance of a determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, a ministerial or executive officer cannot, for himself, pass upon the constitutionality of a statute except in so far as it directly prescribes his official duties, or confers some power or imposes some liability upon him, or prescribes the range of his official conduct.⁵ The right to raise the question of the unconstitutionality of a statute as a defense to a proceeding by mandamus to compel an officer to perform a duty prescribed thereby is discussed elsewhere.⁶

15. Ratification — a. IN GENERAL. — A general discussion of the doctrine of ratification will be found elsewhere in this work, and the principles there stated are generally applicable in the case of public officers.² Questions concerning the ratification of the acts of municipal officers are also treated elsewhere.³

b. BY GOVERNMENT. — The unauthorized acts of public officers, done in the public service, can only be ratified by the legislative branch of the government, or by some person or body duly authorized thereby.⁴ One not possessing the power to do the act in question⁵ or to confer on the officer power to do such act⁶ cannot ratify it. While the general rule that consent or ratification of the doings of the agent may be presumed from the acts or omissions of the principal is applicable in the case of public officers, yet, where a state is the principal, acts and omissions which, in the case of an individual, would be deemed sufficient to authorize the presumption will not be held so.⁷

c. BY PERSON BENEFITED. — The acts of a public officer done in his official capacity, but in excess of the authority conferred on him by law, may be adopted and ratified by the person for whose benefit they were done.⁸

16. Disqualification — a. IN GENERAL. — Disqualification in the case of judicial officers is fully treated elsewhere.⁹ Discussions as to the disqualification of particular officers to perform certain acts are also to be found in other titles.¹⁰

b. MINISTERIAL OFFICERS. — It has been said that ministerial officers are incapable of acting officially when, by reason of certain relations to one of the parties to an action or a proceeding, an undue partiality or interest may be apprehended;¹¹ and also that an officer should not be permitted to perform either a ministerial or a judicial act in his own behalf.¹² In accordance with this rule, it has been decided that an officer cannot serve his own writ.¹³

c. LEGISLATIVE OFFICERS. — Members of a legislative body or municipal board are disqualified to vote on propositions in which they have a direct pecuniary interest adverse to the state or municipality which they represent.¹

17. Expiration of Power. — The general rule is that the power of an officer ceases with his office.² Those acts which in some cases an officer may do after he is discharged from office are recognized as lawful from the necessity of the case or from the great inconvenience which would otherwise arise.³

18. Power to Fix Successor with Liability. — Unless such acts as borrowing money or giving promissory notes are within the official power of the officer, his successors are not bound thereby.⁴ It has been held, however, that an officer acting on behalf of a municipal corporation may make a contract which is to run beyond the probable limitation of his official tenure, provided such contract does not attempt to bind the corporation to the exclusion of the right of succeeding officers to deal with the affairs of the public, or to deprive the corporation of the right to take advantage of the varying circumstances and situations of the public good.⁵ Where the responsibility results from the office, and not from any individual responsibility of the person who occupies it, a suit may be brought against a public officer which is based upon the acts of his predecessors.⁶ A public officer is not liable individually for the acts or omissions of his predecessors.⁷

19. Control by Courts. — The general doctrine is that an officer to whom public duties are confided is not subject to the control of the courts in the exercise of the judgment and discretion which the law reposes in him as a part of his official functions, unless such judgment or discretion is abused and exercised in an arbitrary or capricious manner.⁸ The courts, however, are not bound by the interpretation put by an officer upon the law defining his powers, and if he has acted without authority, or in excess thereof, may declare his action illegal.¹ It is also well settled that when a plain official duty requiring no exercise of discretion is to be performed, and performance is refused, any person who will sustain personal injury by such refusal may have a mandamus to compel its performance,² and when violation of such duty by some positive official act is threatened, any person who will sustain personal injury thereby, for which adequate compensation cannot be had at law, may have an injunction to prevent it.³

20. Review of Official Action. — The general rule applicable to the decisions of courts or of special officers to whom the determination of any particular matter is committed by law is that such determinations, when regularly made, are conclusive, and cannot be questioned or set aside, except in some mode specially provided by law.⁴ There is, however, one fundamental exception to this rule. Not only must an officer have jurisdiction of the subject-matter, but he must also keep within the limits of the power conferred on him by statute.⁵ It is also a general rule that officers of special and limited jurisdiction cannot sit in review of their own orders, or vacate or annul them.⁶

X. LIABILITIES OF PUBLIC OFFICERS — 1. Civil Liability — a. TO GOVERNMENT OR PUBLIC BODY — (1) In General. — Public officers are generally required to give bonds, and their liability to the government or other public body depends on the condition of such bonds.⁷ It seems that a public officer is not a mere agent or servant who is responsible as such to the government or other public body for damages arising from his neglect of duty, unless it is so provided by statute.⁸

(2) Liability as to Public Money — (a) In General. — It is the duty of a public officer charged with the custody and expenditure of public money to keep it safely, and disburse and account for it in accordance with law, and to turn over to the proper authority any sum remaining in his hands at the expiration of his term. For any failure to do so he and the sureties upon his official bond are liable.⁹

(c) Liability for Loss of Public Money. — Where loss of public money could have been avoided by the exercise of due care and diligence, there is no doubt that public officers are liable.¹ There is, however, some conflict in the decisions as to the responsibility of public officers and their sureties for the loss of public money without negligence or fault on the part of the officers. While in some cases officers who have been found guiltless of negligence have been exonerated,² the weight of authority is in favor of holding officials, having the custody of public money, liable for its loss, although occurring without their fault or negligence, the decisions in many of these cases turning upon the construction of the provisions of local statutes and the conditions of the official bonds given by the officers.³ It has, however, been expressly decided

b. To PRIVATE PERSONS — (1) Liability of Legislative Officers. — For acts done in their legislative capacity it seems that legislative officers are not personally liable.²

(2) Liability of Executive Officers. — In the United States it seems that the President of the United States, the governor of a state, and other high government and state officials are not personally liable in a civil action for their official acts.³ In England, however, it seems that an action for damages will lie against all public officials, including the highest officers of the crown.⁴ In Canada the like rule seems to obtain.⁵

(3) Liability of Judicial and Quasi-Judicial Officers — (a) In General. — The liability of judicial officers is fully discussed in other articles in this work.⁶ Public officers who are intrusted by law with the exercise of judgment and discretion, and who are for this reason sometimes denominated quasi-judicial officers, are certainly not liable to a person injured as the result of the exercise of their judicial or discretionary powers, if the acts complained of are done within the scope of their jurisdiction and authority, and without wilfulness, malice, or corruption.⁷ In some cases the rule has been laid down much more broadly, and it is said that no public officer is responsible in a civil suit for a judicial determination, however erroneous it may be, and however malicious or corrupt the motives which produced it, so long as he does not transcend the limits of his authority.¹ The majority of the cases upon the subject do not, however, seem to carry the rule of exemption from liability to this extent.²

(b) Distinction Between Judicial and Ministerial Acts. — Official action is judicial where it is the result of judgment or discretion. When an officer has the authority to hear and determine the rights of persons or property, or the propriety of doing an act, he is vested with judicial power. Official action is ministerial when it is the result of performing a duty imposed by law, and as to which the time, mode, and occasion of its performance are prescribed and defined with such certainty that nothing remains for judgment or discretion.¹ Merely because a ministerial officer has a discretion to exercise as to the methods and instrumentalities to be employed in the discharge of a duty imperatively imposed upon him by law, he is not possessed of the immunity of a judicial officer.²

mistake as to his duty and honest intentions will not excuse a public officer who neglects or refuses to do a ministerial act which the law requires absolutely to be done by him.¹ Nor is he released from liability for a refusal to perform a duty required by statute, because his refusal is based upon an honest belief that such statute is unconstitutional.²

(b) Nature of Duty. — In order to make a public officer liable for neglect of duty, it must be shown that he omitted to discharge a plain duty which the law devolved upon him absolutely and imperatively.³ Such duty should also be a personal one, and one which he is not only under obligation to discharge, but clothed with the ability to perform.¹

(e) Lack of Funds. — When a duty is imposed upon a public officer which requires funds for its performance, the absence of the necessary funds, and of the legal means of procuring them, will excuse the nonperformance of this duty. But it seems that such absence of means should be shown as a defense.²

(d) Contributory Negligence. — It has been said that if the result complained of would have followed notwithstanding the misconduct of the officer, or if the injured party himself contributed to the result in any degree by his own fault or neglect, the officer cannot be held responsible.³

(e) Liability of Member of Corporate Body. — A public officer who is a member of a corporate body upon which a duty rests cannot be held liable individually for the neglect of its duty by that body. If there is any neglect to exercise the powers or means of such body, it is the neglect of the body, and not of the individuals composing it.⁴

(f) Extent of Protection Afforded by Process or Order. — As to the extent of protection afforded to ministerial officers acting in obedience to process, or orders issued to them by tribunals or officers invested by law with authority to pass upon and determine particular facts, and render judgment thereon, it is well settled now that if the officer or tribunal possesses jurisdiction over the subject-matter upon which judgment is passed, with power to issue an order or process for the enforcement of such judgment, and the order or process issued thereon to the ministerial officer is regular on its face, showing no departure from the law or defect of jurisdiction over the person or property affected, then, and in such cases, the order or process will give full and entire protection to the ministerial officer in its regular enforcement, against any prosecution which the party aggrieved thereby may institute against him, although serious errors may have been committed by the officer or tribunal in reaching the conclusion or judgment upon which the order or process is issued.⁵

(g) Special Duty and Injury to Individual Necessary. — The rule seems to be that a private individual may maintain an action for damages against a public officer

(h) Amount of Damages. — When a ministerial officer acts in good faith, without malice, he is not liable for exemplary damages. He is liable only for compensatory damages.²

(5) Liability upon Official Contracts — (a) Generally Not Liable. — A public officer acting for his government is not individually responsible on any contract he may make in that capacity, although executed in a manner which would have made him personally liable had he been acting for an individual. And wherever his contract or engagement is connected with a subject fairly within the scope of his authority, it is presumed to have been made officially and in his public character, unless it clearly appears from the facts and circumstances of the transaction that it was intended by the parties thereto that he should be personally liable.³

Breach of Duty Imposed by Statute. — Wherever an action is brought for a breach of duty imposed by statute, the party bringing it must show that he had an interest in the performance of the duty, and that the duty was imposed for his benefit. But where the duty was created and imposed for the benefit of another, and the advantage to be derived by the party prosecuting, from its performance, is merely incidental, and no part of the design of the statute, no such right is created as forms the subject of an action. *Colorado Paving Co. v. (b) When Liable.³—A public officer may waive his official immunity, and expressly assume a personal liability.¹ If a public officer should deny to the government that he entered into a contract on behalf of the government, and by such interference prevent the other party to the contract from his remedy as against the government, he must be personally liable; as he has by his conduct, in effect, disavowed his acting in the character of a public agent.² If a public officer receives money from the government to enable him to fulfil a contract made by him for the government, and refuses to pay it over, he is liable to the other party to the contract in an action for money had and received to his use.³

(c) Effect of Want of Authority.—When public officers in good faith contract with parties having full knowledge of the extent of their authority, or who have equal means of knowledge with themselves, they do not become personally liable unless the intent to incur personal responsibility is clearly expressed, although it should be found that they have exceeded their authority.⁴

(6) Liability for Acts or Omissions of Subordinates. — It is a well-settled rule that a public officer is not responsible for the acts or omissions of subordinates properly employed by or under him, if such subordinates are not in his private service, but are themselves servants of the government,¹ unless he has directed such acts to be done, or has personally co-operated in the negligence.² Such an officer is, however, liable for the misconduct or negligence, in the scope of their employment, of those employed by or under him, voluntarily or privately, or paid by or responsible to him.³ He is also responsible for failing to exercise proper and reasonable care in the choice of his subordinates, or for not properly superintending them in the discharge of their allotted duties.⁴ The liability of public officers for the acts and omissions of their deputies is fully discussed elsewhere in this work.⁵

(7) Limitation of Actions Against Public Officers. — The time within which actions must be brought against public officers is a matter which depends upon the statutory provisions in the various jurisdictions.⁶

2. Criminal Liability — a. IN GENERAL. — As a general rule, a public officer is liable criminally for malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance in his office. It is unimportant whether the office was created by common law or by statute. Every culpable neglect of duty enjoined on such officer, either by common law or by statute, is an indictable offense.⁷ Where, however, a Liability for False Representation of Authority. — The remedy against one who fraudulently represents himself as a public officer, and in that capacity undertakes to make a contract binding upon the public, is an action on the case for deceit, and not an action for assumpsit upon the contract. *Duncan v. c. PARTICULAR OFFICERS AND OFFENSES. — Questions concerning the criminal liability of particular officers,¹ and the liability of public officers generally for particular offenses, are discussed elsewhere under appropriate titles.²

d. OFFICERS EXEMPT FROM CRIMINAL LIABILITY. — It seems that legislators³ and judges of courts of record⁴ are not usually criminally liable for official acts. These and other high public officers are generally to be proceeded against by impeachment.⁵ Grand jurors, while perhaps not strictly speaking public officers, are, it seems, also exempt from indictment for official acts and omissions.⁶

3. Liability to Penalty. — Public officers are sometimes by statute made liable to penalties for certain acts or omissions.⁷

XI. LIABILITY OF PUBLIC FOR ACTS OF OFFICERS — 1. In General. — The general rule is that the government or other public authority is not bound by the acts, contracts, or representations of public officers unless such acts, contracts, or representations are within the scope of such officers' authority.⁸

The liability of particular public authorities is fully discussed under appropriate titles.¹

2. Ascertainment of Authority by Third Persons. — The rule that persons dealing with an agent must, at their peril, ascertain his authority, and the extent thereof, is applicable to public officers. And for reasons of public policy the law imputes to every person transacting business with public officers, who are acting under a limited statutory authority, full knowledge of their official power and authority.²

XII. LIABILITY OF PRIVATE PERSONS FOR ACTS OF PUBLIC OFFICERS. — A person who, in order to maintain his private rights, or to punish a public wrong, invokes the services of a public officer, is not generally liable for the acts or omissions of such officer.³ The application of this rule in particular cases, and the exceptions thereto, are fully discussed elsewhere in this work.⁴

XIII. COMPENSATION — 1. In General. — The term "compensation" as here used includes all forms which the remuneration of public officers may take, whether salary, or fees, or percentage commissions, or mileage, or special appropriations, or allowances for necessary expenses.⁵

5. As to the Meaning of the Words "Salary"

2. Forms — a. SALARY. — Salary has been defined as a fixed annual or periodical payment for services, depending upon the amount of service rendered.¹ The legislature has sometimes provided that, in counties containing a specified number of inhabitants, certain officers shall be paid by salary only.² In other cases fees have been abolished and salaries substituted therefor.³

The Legislature, in Substituting Salary for Fees, may continue the fees and direct them to be paid by the officer into the public treasury. Such a requirement is not unconstitutional on the ground that it imposes a tax without specifying the object to which it shall be applied.⁴

A Year's Salary for Less than a Year's Service. — Where an officer serving for an annual salary performs his duties for the year within less than a year, he is entitled to a year's salary upon the performance of such duties, and this although the office may be abolished before the end of the year.⁵

Interest on Salary. — An officer whose salary is payable out of the state treasury, or whose fees are payable by an attorney or other individual, is entitled to interest on the same from the time he applies to the auditor for a warrant or from the time the fees became due.⁶

and "Compensation," and whether they are distinctive or synonymous terms, see COMPENSATION, vol. 6, p. 369. See also the following cases: *Martin v. In Its Larger and Nontechnical Sense, salary is equivalent to allowance, hire, pay, stipend, or wages, and salary has been so construed in warrants for an official salary where the officer was entitled merely to fees and commissions. San Juan County v. Oliver, 7 Colo. App. 515. See also Com. v. Butler, 99 Pa. St. 535, quoted under EXEMPTIONS (FROM EXECUTION), vol. 12, p. 135, note; Hamberger v. Marcius, 157 Pa. St. 137.

Salary and Wages Distinguished. — In People v. Myers, 25 Abb. N. Cas. 368, 42 Alb. L. J. 332, the term "salary" is shown by universal usage to be confined to the compensation of public officers and the higher officers of corporations, while "wages" is the term used in reference to laborers, servants, and the like. See also the title EXEMPTIONS (FROM EXECUTION), vol. 12, p. 135.

6. Interest on Salary. — Swann v. Turner, 23 Miss. 565; Cone v. Donaldson, 47 Pa. St. 363.

b. FEES. — Fees are compensation allowed by law for specific services by an officer.¹ Where remuneration for services is by fees, it is ordinarily provided that the compensation shall not exceed a specified maximum amount, and when such a limit is specified, the officer is usually regarded as a salaried one.² And where the constitution allows a maximum compensation, no act of assembly can validly prescribe a lower sum.³

How Deficit Is Paid. — An officer whose compensation is paid by fees is entitled to credit for fees earned and chargeable to the county as well as for those received and paid over, and when the fees of any one year do not aggregate his salary, he is entitled to receive an excess standing to his credit from a preceding year.⁴

Where Payment Is by Fees and Not Salary, an agreement by the officer to accept a fixed sum in lieu of the fees is against public policy and void.⁵

Where an Officer Performs Services for Which No Fee Is Specially Allowed, it has been held under a Vermont statute that he is entitled to charge therefor a sum in proportion to the fee established by law.⁶

To Pay Fees into the Treasury. — An officer is usually required to keep an account of fees as received and to render an account thereof at stated periods to the auditor-general or other officer and to pay them or the surplus over and above his salary into the state treasury.⁷

c. PER DIEM. — Officers paid by a per diem compensation have been held not to be entitled to compensation during a period of adjournment for the purpose of visiting their homes.⁸ But they are entitled to the per diem fee for each day on which they perform substantial official service, whether or not it consumes the entire day.⁹

d. APPROPRIATIONS. — Where the law fixes the compensation of a public officer and designates the time for payment, this is sometimes regarded as tantamount to an appropriation of the necessary amount of money to that purpose, and no special act of the legislature is necessary.¹⁰

Likewise, where an officer is compelled to repay an excess of fees which he should have paid into the treasury without demand, interest may be recovered on the amount thereof. Hazelet v. Holt County, 51 Neb. 716.

No Payment Without an Appropriation. — But in view of a constitutional prohibition against paying money out of the treasury except in pursuance of an appropriation by law, it has been held that in all other cases an officer is not entitled to recover for services unless he can show an act appropriating money for the purpose.¹

Where It Is Uncertain Whether the Legislature Intended to Devote a Larger or Smaller Sum to the payment of a salary, it has been held that the doubt should be resolved by adopting the smaller amount, since the interest of the public, other things being equal, is superior to that of an individual.²

Where for Any Reasons a Regular Salary Has Not Been Fixed by the legislature, it has been held that that body may provide for the payment of one by temporary appropriations.³

e. COMMISSIONS. — It is often provided that the whole or a portion of the compensation of public officers shall be paid in the way of commissions⁴ on collections or disbursements. Where moneys are collected by two successive incumbents during one fiscal year, it has been held that the rate at which commissions are to be calculated must be based upon the collections made by both incumbents, and not by each separately.⁵

an expenditure of money for which no provision is made, he may pay therefor and have the amount allowed him. Prohibitions against increasing the compensation of officers do not apply to such cases. Thus, it is customary to allow officers expenses of fuel, clerk hire, stationery, lights, and other office accessories.¹

Where an Officer Is Required to Keep and Transmit Yearly Accounts, if he does not do so, he does not forfeit his right to be reimbursed for expenditures, but only subjects himself to the payment of the penalty.²

Expenses in Defending Suits. — Officers cannot recover for expenses incurred in defending suits brought against them while in office, unless the acts complained of were done by them as the agents or servants of the government, and under its control and responsible thereto,³ nor in defending criminal prosecutions brought against them for misfeasance in office;⁴ but a municipal corporation may assume the expenses of such suit where the interests of the town are directly involved,⁵ and may reimburse its agents for the expenses of an investigation of their official conduct made by order of the city government.⁶

g. MILEAGE. — Mileage is often provided as a means of paying a part of the compensation of a public officer.⁷

Only One Mileage Fee Is Chargeable where only one trip is made, although the matters attended to might have been the subject of two or more trips.⁸

The Travel Must Be Necessary and not done for the sake of the fee,⁹ and the charge must be based upon the actual distance traversed.¹⁰

The officer may employ the usual and speediest route of travel, although not the shortest. Maynard v. Cedar County, 51 Iowa 430.

3. Amount — a. WHERE NO REMUNERATION IS PROVIDED. — A public officer whose salary is specified by statute is entitled to his salary for services actually performed according to the statute, which in this respect is a contract.¹ On the other hand, his claims are limited by the statute, and however meritorious his services, if no compensation for them is provided by statute, none can be recovered.²

If a Public Office Is Created but No Compensation Is Fixed by the creating act, it is to be inferred that no compensation is intended and that the officer undertakes to serve in such office gratis.³ The court has no power in such cases to extend the statute so as to allow compensation,⁴ even though the failure to provide compensation is clearly an oversight,⁵ unless special power to do so has been conferred upon it. Such an act on its part is judicial and not clerical.⁶ A public officer may make a reasonable charge for services performed in his private capacity for a private person.⁷

Exceptions. — It has been held in several cases that, even in the absence of special provision for payment and where the services had been performed, a reasonable compensation should be allowed therefor.⁸

b. WHERE NO EXTRA REMUNERATION IS PROVIDED — In General. — From the general principle that a public officer can claim only the compensation fixed by law, it is a corollary that he is not entitled to increased remuneration for increased services, unless such is expressly allowed by law or sanctioned by ancient usage which presupposes legislative authority. In such case the officer is said to take the office cum onere and cannot be heard to complain if the compensation provided by law is insufficient for the duties performed.⁹

Cannot Be Increased. — And here, likewise, although the statutory compensation be clearly inadequate, it cannot be increased either by the court in its discretion¹ or by private agreement. A contract to pay more than the law allows, no matter how freely and voluntarily entered into, is void as against public policy. This is an ancient common-law doctrine and has often been re-enacted by the state legislatures.²

After Term Expires. — But recovery may be had for services performed by agreement after the expiration of a term of office, based, however, not upon a void contract for such services made during the term, but upon an implied contract.³

Subordinate Governmental Authority. — Neither has a board of commissioners or any other subordinate governmental authority the power to fix the salary of one of its officers at a greater sum than has been fixed by superior authority,⁴ and such a contract is ultra vires and incapable of ratification.⁵

General Power to Fix by Agreement. — But where an officer is appointed, not by virtue of an act of Congress regulating compensation, but under a general authority lawfully exercised by some subordinate governmental authority, his compensation must be regulated by the agreement between the officer and his employer.¹

Unauthorized Appointment. — Even the appointment of one to office, made by the proper authority, if in excess of the authorized number of appointees, does not entitle such appointee to draw pay for services rendered.²

Increase of Duties required of the officer is no ground for demanding increased compensation when the act imposing the increase makes no provision therefor,³ nor can the incumbent recover for such extra services on the principle of an implied contract.⁴

Constructive Services. — There is no such thing as constructive services or fees by implication in the case of public officers.⁵

Effect of Repeal of Statute. — Where statutes allowing fees and perquisites are repealed, the officer is thereafter limited to a fixed salary, if there be such provided.⁶

Amount Not Fixed. — Where compensation is allowed, but no amount is fixed, the officer may be allowed a reasonable sum.⁷

Special Enactments. — The general rule forbidding extra compensation must, of course, yield to special enactments giving additional compensation for specific services.⁸

Offices Not Incompatible. — And where the same person lawfully fills two offices, separate and distinct and not incompatible, he may draw the salary or be paid the fees belonging to both.⁹

Technicalities. — While it is true that statutes giving compensation are strictly construed, still, where services have been performed by an officer holding two positions, payment will not be refused on purely technical grounds where the

that an officer shall hold over until his successor qualifies, one so holding over is nevertheless entitled to salary for the additional time served.¹

Extra Compensation as "Reward." — It is a general rule that a public officer may not claim an offered reward for services performed in the line of his official duties.² But he may in proper cases recover pay for services as an "informer."³ The right of an officer to extra compensation cannot be adjudicated in a proceeding to determine his title to the office.⁴

c. HOW ASCERTAINED. — The amount of compensation to which an officer is entitled is, of course, to be ascertained primarily by reference to the statutes or contract under which he is employed. Still the courts have been called upon to construe such statutes and contracts in numerous cases, difficult to classify because involving no principle of law.⁵ Although the market rates of pay for a given service are lower than that provided by statute, the latter sum must be paid unless a contract for a smaller amount can be shown.⁶ A county treasurer has no right, without previous audit of his claim, to pay to himself fees out of trust funds in his hands, and thus to determine the amount due from himself as trustee to himself as officer.⁷

4. How and by Whom Fixed — a. IN GENERAL. — Sometimes the constitution, when creating an office, fixes the compensation to be paid to the incumbent. More frequently it leaves to the legislature the determination of salaries and fees, and the legislature may in turn cast this duty upon various boards, councils, courts, or other officers.

b. THE CONSTITUTION. — When the constitution prescribes the salary, no legislative appropriation is needed to authorize the officer to receive it, although the constitution may provide that no money shall be drawn from the treasury except in pursuance of a specific appropriation. Officers whose salaries are fixed by the legislature would need the assistance of such a special appropriation.⁸ Where the constitution provides payment by fees, and where the maximum of such compensation is thereby limited to a certain sum, the legislature, although it may not limit a smaller maximum specifically, may prescribe such a schedule of fees as would reduce the compensation of an officer below the constitutional maximum.¹ And where such maximum is fixed, each year's aggregate of fees stands by itself, and separate annual accounts must be rendered.²

c. CONGRESS. — The compensation of officers of the United States is fixed by laws made by Congress.³ Still, in some cases other officers, such as the attorney-general, have a general supervisory power of the accounts of inferior officers.⁴

d. STATE LEGISLATURES. — In the absence of constitutional restriction the compensation of all public officers, whether payable by salary or by fees, is subject to legislative control,⁵ and should be fixed by a general law, and not voted as an annual gratuity.⁶ Where the constitution provides that the compensation of all public officers "shall be fixed and provided for by law," an act of the legislature giving the court the power to fix the salary of a deputy clerk is unconstitutional and void.⁷ But an act regulating the subject does not violate a clause of the constitution prohibiting the legislature from passing local or special laws for collecting taxes for "state, county, and township purposes."⁸ And where it requires the compensation to be "in proportion to duties," the construction of this clause rests with the legislature and not with the court.⁹

Appropriation — Ratification of Claim. — An appropriation by the legislature to pay for certain services for which suit had been begun is a mere proposition for a settlement, and is not a ratification of the claim.¹⁰

Imperative Statute. — A statute fixing a salary and requiring the supervisors to audit it is imperative and leaves to the supervisors no discretion.¹¹

e. COURTS. — Under some statutes the court or a judge thereof is authorized to fix certain salaries or fees.¹² But where no fees are allowed an officer, the judge's allowance does not justify paying the claim.¹³ When the authorities charged with fixing compensation fail to do so, an appeal may lie to the court to fix it.¹⁴ And it seems that the court may interfere and fix a reasonable compensation where the legislature has fixed it so low as to be equivalent to abolishing the office.¹⁵

f. BOARD OF SUPERVISORS. — In the absence of any law fixing the compensation of county officers, the board of supervisors, or of commissioners, or of auditors, whatever name the county authorities may bear, is empowered to fix it.¹⁶ But such commissioners have no power to fix a salary upon a per diem basis when the statute allows a fair and adequate monthly compensation,¹ nor, conversely, can they vote an officer a lump sum when the statute gives him for extra services "such sums as may be allowed by the board of supervisors."² They cannot reduce the salary of an officer to a merely nominal sum, and thereby nullify the law creating the office.³ When such board has allowed a claim, the auditor must audit it and draw his warrants therefor.⁴

In New York City, under the reorganization act of 1873, a board of apportionment was charged with the duty of fixing the salaries of all city officers. This did not apply to clerks of district courts who were embraced within the judicial system of the state.⁵ And the commissioners of taxes and assessments in New York county were, by the act of 1869, empowered to appoint and fix the compensation of clerks and employees.⁶

g. CITY COUNCIL. — The charters of the larger cities usually authorize the city council or other governing body to fix the salaries of the city officers.⁷ Where the common council continues to pay an officer's salary at a former rate, it cannot be inferred that they intended to fix his salary at a smaller sum from the mere fact that they appropriated for that purpose a smaller amount than had previously been paid.⁸

h. USAGE. — Usage has sometimes been resorted to to fix the compensation of officers for extra services not within the line of their duty.⁹ But a custom of charging for work by estimates will not prevail against an actual count.¹⁰

i. MISCELLANEOUS. — In other cases various officers, such as the comptroller,¹¹ or the clerk of court, sheriff, and prosecuting attorney,¹² or the superintendent of public works,¹³ have been empowered to fix the compensation of certain other officers. No officer is allowed to fix his own compensation.¹⁴

5. Right to Compensation — a. FOLLOWS TITLE TO THE OFFICE. — It is a principle of general application that the right of a public officer to the compensation of his office is incident to and dependent upon his right and title to the office.¹⁵ Hence, if constitutionally ineligible at the time of assuming office, and therefore without title thereto, he is a volunteer and cannot recover for services.¹ But an officer elected under an unconstitutional law is entitled to his salary if the election be validated by another law,² or he may recover under a prior constitutional act.³ The possession of a certificate of election entitles the holder thereof to the compensation of the office, notwithstanding a contest is pending to determine his right to the office;⁴ but not unless he has qualified by giving bond.⁵ The right of one legally entitled to an office is not affected by the illegal intrusion of another thereinto and his performance of part of the duties thereof.⁶

b. RIGHT TO PERFORM SERVICES. — On the other hand, the right to perform the services and to receive the compensation is one of which the officer cannot be deprived by the appointment of another person to do the work.⁷ Thus, if money is disbursed by any other agency than by the treasurer, a right of action exists in his favor for the amount of the commissions he would have received if he had disbursed it.⁸

c. IN DISPUTED CASES. — Where the right to the office is in dispute, a court cannot, before this is determined, render judgment for the incumbent's salary.⁹ And an appropriation to pay a salary cannot be paid to one of two appointees until it is judicially decided that one of them is alone entitled thereto;¹⁰ but the court having rendered such judgment, the incumbent is entitled to the emoluments from that date, notwithstanding the pendency of an appeal.¹¹ Where the substantial duties are performed by one officer, payment therefor should not be made to his successor.¹² Until collected, fees to which a clerk is entitled remain a charge in favor of the clerk and are his whenever collected.¹³

d. RIGHT TO UNEARNED COMPENSATION. — A public officer has no estate in his office, and, therefore, the unearned fees and emoluments thereof are not property,¹⁴ and requiring them to be paid into the treasury and a salary paid in lieu thereof is not taking private property for public use without compensation.¹⁵ Nor is his official position a contract within the clause of the various constitutions prohibiting the states from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts.¹⁶ already earned is property which the legislature cannot destroy by enacting that such fees shall be turned into the treasury. The right of the legislature to change the amount of compensation to be paid gives it no right, under pretense of such change, to confiscate fees previously earned.¹ And where the right to the office is certain the officer is entitled to the salary even if he neglects his duties or performs them in an unsatisfactory manner,² or is prevented from performing them by sickness³ or by imprisonment on a charge of which he is subsequently acquitted,⁴ or though the duties are diminished or abolished, the office still remaining.⁵ But an officer is not entitled to pay for merely colorable attendance in court,⁶ and has no claim for salary or perquisites for a period during which he was not the actual incumbent.⁷ And generally where specific compensation is given for the performance of specific duties, the officer is not entitled to pay unless he performs the duties.⁸ By the Colorado constitution no right to compensation arises from a resolution providing therefor after the services have been rendered.⁹

f. WHEN OFFICE IS ABOLISHED. — Where an office is abolished the right to the salary ceases to exist,¹⁰ and the former incumbent cannot demand compensation for an unexpired term.¹¹ There is, moreover, no right to the salary of an office abolished before the claimant was commissioned thereto.¹² Where an office is abolished and the duties thereof thrown upon another officer, an incumbent at the time of such abolition is not entitled to salary between the time the office is abolished and the time the other officer assumes the duties thereof,¹³ but a successful contestant for a public office is entitled to the salary from the time that his right thereto accrues until the trial of the actions contesting the right.¹⁴

g. DURING SUSPENSION. — From the general rule that the right to receive the compensation of an office attaches itself to the legal title to the office, it is an obvious inference that one wrongly suspended from office is still entitled to the salary pending a trial of the question of right, or pending an appeal

While a collector would be entitled, it seems, to the emoluments of his office during an illness where his deputy continues to perform the duties, his estate is not entitled to such emoluments after his death. from the judgment of removal,¹ or until the order of removal is revoked by the executive,² and whether he renders any service or not,³ and regardless of any sums earned otherwise while suspended.⁴ But the right to the salary is sometimes held to depend upon the performance of the services. In such jurisdictions a suspended officer would not be entitled to pay during the period of suspension,⁵ and he is not entitled to pay for the time between the preferring of charges and the making of the order of removal, where he does not attend to his duties during such time.⁶ An agreement by the officer to serve gratis during his suspension bars a subsequent claim for compensation for such services.⁷ Where the suspended officer does not complain for a year, he can recover for a wrongful suspension only the amount that would probably have been due upon a prompt settlement of his claim.⁸

h. AFTER RESIGNATION. — Where an officer resigns one office by the acceptance of another, the salary of the first office ceases when he qualifies for the second office, and he should receive the compensation attached to the first until he qualifies for the second.⁹

i. AFTER DISMISSAL. — Upon removal for cause the right of an officer to compensation ceases at once.¹⁰

j. RETAINING SALARY FROM MONEY COLLECTED. — Where a statute provides that a public officer shall receive as compensation a certain sum payable out of funds collected, and another act requires him to pay all money collected into the treasury, he is not entitled to retain his salary out of money collected by him, but is entitled to a warrant from the auditor on the treasurer therefor.¹¹ An officer who has paid over to his successor all money in his hands, including a sum that he was entitled to as commission, cannot, when he is again elected to the same office, retain from the money then coming into his hands the commissions so paid over by him.¹²

k. FRAUD. — The right to compensation is barred by fraud in procuring the office.¹³ But in an action for salary or fees the title of the claimant to the office cannot be collaterally attacked.¹⁴

6. When Compensation Becomes Due. — Salary fixed at so much a month is payable monthly, unless otherwise provided.¹⁵ An officer is usually required to qualify before entering upon the duties of his office, and is entitled to draw pay only from the time of qualifying.¹⁶ The holder of a contested seat in Congress is entitled to pay from the time the compensation of his predecessor ceased.¹ Where by mistake an officer takes possession and begins to discharge the duties of his office six months after he should have done so, he is not entitled to pay for the six months.²

7. Who Liable For. — The acts which create a public office and provide the compensation of the officer usually determine what department of the government shall pay it. In construing these statutes it has sometimes been held that particular obligations to public officers were or were not payable by the state,³ or by the county,⁴ or by a municipal corporation,⁵ or by the officer authorizing the services,⁶ or by a private individual for whom they are performed.⁷

8. From What Fund Payable. — Constitutional officers with fixed salaries may be paid by warrants out of the general fund of the state. In Louisiana such warrants have priority over all other warrants against such funds.⁸ Sometimes the duty of auditing the accounts of all officers is imposed upon the comptroller, without whose order no funds can be disbursed by the treasurer.⁹ Where an officer is appointed to be paid from a particular fund, he cannot claim payment after such fund is exhausted.¹⁰

9. Increasing and Decreasing Compensation — a. IN GENERAL. — The state constitutions have often provided that the compensation of certain enumerated officers shall not be increased or decreased during their term of office.¹¹ The charter of a municipal corporation is the fundamental law of such corporation,

In Pennsylvania it has been held that the prohibition against a law increasing or diminishing salaries applies to laws passed by the legislature, but not to city ordinances. Baldwin v. Philadelphia, 99 Pa. St. 164.

and is its constitution; hence, a by-law reducing the fees of an officer is void.¹

Such Change Unconstitutional. — A law which attempts to increase or decrease the salary of a public officer contrary to a constitutional prohibition is unconstitutional and void;² and any attempt on the part of the court or of a superior officer or of a board to alter the compensation of employees during their term is likewise void.³ The rule applies as well to offices created by statute as to those created by the constitution.⁴ The prohibition may not be evaded by a resignation and re-appointment.⁵

But in the Absence of Such Constitutional Prohibition the legislature may change both the term of office and the compensation of those then in office, as well as of future incumbents,⁶ and may confer upon a common council or other inferior governmental authority the same power.⁷ It has in fact been laid down as a general rule that the authority which establishes the compensation may change it unless there be constitutional prohibition to the contrary.¹ But the power of such governmental body to fix or change salaries rests solely upon statute, and is subject to all the limitations contained therein;² and a board cannot, after fixing a salary, change it except by further action spread upon the record,³ nor without notice to the incumbent.⁴ Where a salary of a public officer is fixed at a certain sum without any limitation as to time, it is not changed by an act which merely appropriates a less amount for the services of that officer, but which contains no express or implied repeal or modification of the previous law.⁵

Officer Designated by Name — Right of Successor. — A resolution of a board, subsequently ratified by an act of the legislature, fixing the salary of an incumbent by name, does not inure to the benefit of his successor in office.⁶ Where salaries are fixed for a year based upon population or assessed valuation, or other figures liable to change, the amount must remain fixed for an official year; although it may be shown that during such year the basis of computation has changed.⁷

b. ESTOPPEL BY ACCEPTING LESS THAN AMOUNT DUE. — An officer is not debarred from recovering the legal salary or fees by an agreement to perform the service for less than the legal allowance,⁸ and one who accepts reduced pay is not thereby estopped to claim the statutory allowance,⁹ especially if accepted under protest.¹⁰ But an officer may, by the voluntary acceptance of a reduction and long acquiescence therein be estopped to claim more.¹¹

c. DISTINCTION BETWEEN RIGHT TO APPOINT AND TO FIX SALARY. — A distinction is made between the right of one to appoint an incumbent to an office whose salary is beyond his control, and the right of one to appoint and likewise to fix the salary. In the latter case an employee may be shifted from one occupation to another and his salary changed each time.¹²

e. REDUCTION BY CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT. — Moreover, the official term of an officer may be shortened by a constitutional amendment, and the salary will then cease with the shortened term.³

10. Recovery of Compensation. — Where the right to the compensation of an office has been established, mandamus will lie to compel payment thereof,⁴ or the amount due may be recovered in an ordinary action.⁵ But an officer in default in excess of the value of his services cannot enforce a claim for salary.⁶ And one refused admission to his office on the ground of disqualification, by commissioners acting in good faith, cannot recover of the latter damages for the profits of the office withheld; it would be otherwise if the action of the commissioners was prompted by malice or to accomplish some unlawful end.⁷ Where an act attempts to reduce the salary of an officer, but fails to repeal a prior act, the officer may recover under the prior act the amount allowed thereby.⁸ Fees paid to an officer for services to be performed by his successor may be recovered by the latter in an action of assumpsit against the former.⁹ Where an officer sues for salary he is not liable to have deducted therefrom a sum earned by outside work.¹⁰

11. Recovering Back Money Illegally Paid. — Salary, fees, and emoluments of an office illegally paid to the incumbent, or any excess so paid, may be recovered back in an action at law as money had and received,¹¹ and this, it has been held, although not paid under a misapprehension of the facts, where paid by order of the council of which the official was a member.¹² But the defendant will be allowed to retain the reasonable expenses of earning such salary and fees, in cases where he assumed to act upon an apparent right to the office.¹³ The right to recover back extends to fees, etc., paid to the offi-
